MacMonnies' Fine Work.
We Think Too Little.
Perhaps, Like Alaska.
Tim Healy Is Dead.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

FREDERICK W. MacMonnies has completed his bust of Whistler for the Hall of Fame, creating an admirable work that will make a visit to the Hall of Fame worth while.

With power possessed by no other sculptor since the death of Saint-Gaudens, Mr. MacMonnies shows, externally, as a sculptor must, the internal spirit and power of the brilliant painter.

If Whistler could have seen this work of his friend, MacMonnies, it would have satisfied even Whistler.

Thirty years younger than Whistler, MacMonnies knew him well when studying at the Beaux Arts in Paris, and later. The Hall of Fame should permit reproduction of the bust, regardless of copyright restrictions, at least for London and Paris.

SOME COMPLAIN that modern men do too little thinking. Perhaps there is too much to think about.

The continent of Europe is said to be planning, in Rome, a boycott to shut out American wheat. You might think a long time about that, and its consequences.

HOWEVER, BEFORE worrying too much about European boycotts, and hostility to the United States, remember conditions in India.

That country is always planning something against England. But at the last moment a Hindu sees a Mohammedan, they start killing each other and forget about England.

European nations will forget about America, and American boycotts, on slight provocation. But they will never forget to borrow, if they can.

PRESIDENT HOOVER is said to express "great hope for the future of Porto Rico, little for the Virgin Islands."

In buying those islands, according to President Hoover, we "acquired an effective poorhouse." Apart from the standpoint of naval defense it is "unfortunate" that the United States ever bought the islands.

We paid $25,000,000 for those islands, which isn't much money. It should not be forgotten that Seward's purchase of Alaska, for $8,000,000, was called "Seward's folly."

We have got back that amount many times in sealskins alone, many more times in gold. Nobody would suggest selling Alaska for a thousand millions or for 10,000 millions.

AS FOR the Virgin Islands, that territory PLUS INTELLIGENCE, plus flying machines and submarines, could make the Panama Canal safe.

Some day someone will attend to that.

TIMOTHY HEALY is dead, only 76 years old. He was a hard fighter for Ireland, in the days of oppression, and a good first governor general of the Irish Free State.

He feared nobody and said what he thought, telling a Tory major in the House of Commons to his face:

"The honorable and gallant gentleman is a willful and cowardly liar."

He could give his best on a minute's notice. When news came of the Mitchellstown disaster, Tim Healy and Gladstone both spoke in the early morning, Gladstone old, Healy young, and both spoke admirably. Healy made enemies for himself, friends for his cause. The spirit of Ireland mourns another good fighting son.

A PRACTICALLY unknown horse named Grakle, starting with odds 100 to 6 against him, won the Grand National Steeplechase, with 300,000, including Americans and other foreigners, looking on.

If the intense interest that such a race develops could be concentrated on some of England's other problems, they might be solved. Some Americans won large sums on the race. That will ruin them.

MONTAGU NORMAN, governor of the Bank of England, arrives, planning, it is said, with American banks to finance Russia's gigantic industrial undertakings.

It is surprising that our high finance should sit looking on, waiting for some Englishman to tell them what to do.

Bacon said:

"I have taken all knowledge for my province."

The English banker says:

"I have taken the whole earth for my province."

IF RUSSIA succeeds in her gigantic industrial experiments, it will include growing grain on a "production basis" that will save Europe the trouble of boycotting American wheat.

Russia may "peg" the world price of wheat at 50 cents or lower. On choice lands with "combines" that eliminate 80 per cent of harvest labor, Kansas can grow wheat at 30 cents.

If our industrialists put their intelligence and our bankers put their money into agriculture on a big scale, we need fear nothing from Russia or any country.

LABOR BACKS MUSMANNO POLICE BILL

Proposed Pinchot Measure Amendments Fail to Swing Federation From Views

By ED PRENDERGAST
Staff Correspondent.

HARRISBURG, March 28.—Gov. Pinchot's coal and iron police bill will be amended at future conferences, but the State Federation of Labor will continue to sponsor the Musmanno bill.

These were the developments today following yesterday's meeting in the Governor's office, when three representatives of industry, three of labor and one of the Civil Liberties Union discussed the pending legislation. Just what amendments will be made to the Wilson administration measure the Governor did not disclose, and participants in the conference likewise kept silent.

A counter plan was introduced by the Civil Liberties Union, which provides further limitation of deputies, enlargements of the state police force, an investigation of civil liberties and local self-government in company towns, with the eventual plan to have local police in these towns, rather than coal and iron police, and the repeal of the existing Mansfield act.

Gov. Pinchot said those attending were Philip Murray, international vice president of the Mine Workers; L. H. Burnett, vice president of Carnegie Steel Company, both of Pittsburgh; W. S. Hennig, Lehigh Valley Coal Company; H. J. Harley, Reading Iron and Coal Company; John A. Phillips, president of the State Federation of Labor; Tom Kennedy, of the Anthracite Mine Workers, and Rabbi Philip Bookstaber, of the Civil Liberties Union.

Phillips said the position of the federation was unchanged, and that it was still "unqualifiedly behind the Musmanno bill."

SHIP FLASHES SOS SIGNAL

NEW YORK, March 28.—(AP.)—A fleet of ships today was searching off the New Jersey coast as result of SOS messages which indicated a ship had sunk and its company taken to lifeboats.

The ship was not identified. Broadcasting was halted. Three coast guard boats and a freighter put out from New York; three power boats were sent out from the New Jersey coast.

The Sebago, first rescue craft to reach the vicinity, reported shortly after 5 a. m. No rockets or other distress signals could be seen.

Messages from the ship purported to be in distress gave neither call letters nor name.

Everyone Wins On Irish Race Except the Irish

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

Buffalo mechanic won Irish prize on race run in England.

An Italian grabbed first prize, an American second, a couple of Hunga ians also scored and a Chinese laundryman copped a little gravy.

The Irish Free State sweepstakes holds true to the traditions of Old Erin. Everybody got a piece of it except an Irishman.

The Buffalo man won over $800,000 and will buy the hoss that won for him. So he will be back at work the same time next year.

The next great sweepstakes will be the Suburban Handicap. The proceeds will be used to buy commutation tickets for rural porch climbers.

G. J. KAMBACH'S SISTER DIES

While plans were being made for the funeral tomorrow of former Councilman George J. Kambach, who died Thursday at his home in the South Side, his sister, Mrs. Lillian Kambach Bock, of 1113 Park street, Tarentum, died from pneumonia. She had been ill since Tuesday and did not know of her brother's death.

The parents, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Kambach, both past 70, were not told of the death of their second child.

Mrs. Bock died at 5:30 a. m. At her bedside were her husband, George Bock, and her two sons, George Robert, 14, and Jack, 9.

It could not be learned at the Kambach home whether funeral plans for Mr. Kambach would be changed on account of the second death.

QUIZ DELAYS $3,000,000 CITY WORK

Director Lang Questioned On Appointments; Herd Selection Under Scrutiny

City Council's investigation of the Department of Public Works is holding up more than $3,000,000 in construction work while department heads are giving testimony, according to Charles M. Reppert, chief city engineer.

The hearing, adjourned yesterday, will be reopened Monday at 10 a. m. Director of Public Works Edward G. Lang will probably be asked to testify regarding methods used in appointing subordinant engineers.

EVANS QUIZZES LANG

Henry Oliver Evans, who has brought the charges of wasteful methods in estimating and letting city construction contracts, began to question Lang closely on how and by whom appointments were made.

Attorney Lee C. Beatty protested against this line of inquiry on the ground that it was outside the scope of the investigation. His objection was not sustained, but Evans agreed to drop the payroll question for the time being to complete the testimony of E. C. Shoecraft, engineer from Michigan.

SAYS HE CHOSE HERD

Evans called Lang to the stand and asked if the director had selected William A. Herd as an inspector of the Bureau of Bridges.

Lang replied he had selected Herd for the position and that he did not usually ask for assistance in making appointments not under the civil service.

Evans asked:

"Did anyone recommend him?
"I don't remember that."
"Well, how did you come to appoint him?"

EXPLAINS METHOD

Attorney Beatty interrupted, declaring the question was not confined to the issue of alleged wasteful methods in contracts. John S. Herron, president of Council agreed, but Evans demanded:

"I want to know what is the method used in appointing men."

Lang answered:

"All technical appointments are made by the director and

WOODVILLE AIDE HANGS SELF

Howard McWilliams, 47, assistant superintendent of Allegheny County Home at Woodville, ended his life by hanging in his room at the home, according to a report to the county morgue today.

McWilliams' body, hanging from a rope attached to a wall, was found by employes of the home who had gone to awaken him for breakfast today. A physician said McWilliams had been dead since midnight. Despondency over ill health of several months duration was blamed.

McWilliams was unmarried, and had been an official of the home for several years.

FOLLOWS HIS SUCCESSOR, BARNARD

American League Pioneer and New President Taken by Death in Few Hours

ST. LOUIS, March 28.—Ban Johnson, former president of the American League, died here today, following a lingering illness.

Johnson, founder of the American League, and its fighting president for years, died only a few hours after E. S. Barnard—who succeeded him as president of the American League—had died suddenly at Rochester, Minn.

Johnson had been ill for months, suffering from diabetes, and his doctors had given up hope for his recovery weeks ago.

Johnson's fighting spirit—the same that kept him battling on until the ravages of ill health left him a broken old man before his energetic enemies were able to run him out of the American League presidency—made the veteran the dominant figure during the period of baseball's greatest development.

GAVE UP LAW

Although he started out as a lawyer after graduating from Marietta College in Ohio, Johnson concluded as president of the American League via the newspaper route.

After spending two years studying law at the Cincinnati School of Law with Charles G. Dawes, present ambassador to the Court of St. James, Johnson decided he was not fitted for the legal profession and took a job reporting on the Cincinnati Commercial.

He worked over into the sports department of his newspaper. He covered the Sullivan-Mitchell fight, a task that involved racing through a large portion of Louisiana a few jumps ahead of the law.

Johnson became president of the Western League in 1893. The first of a series of long battles to oust Johnson originated with John

Gandhi to Wear Only Loincloth to London

KARACHI, India, March 28.—(AP.)—When Gandhi goes to London for the second round table conference on India his only garb he has indicated, will be his Hindu pariah's gossamer dhoti or loincloth, spun by Mirabia, nee Madeline Slade, daughter of an English admiral who is his constant and devoted companion.

If the London weather happens to be a little cool he will throw a piece of cheesecloth over his chest.

He has a horror of living in hotels so if Premier MacDonald invites him to stay at 10 Downing street, the Mahatma will bring his own pots and pans so that Mirabai may prepare his meals in orthodox Hindu fashion.

If the Prime Minister offers India's anchorite a soft, downy English bed, Gandhi is expected to decline, preferring to sleep in the yard of 10 Downing street on a hard straw burlap mattress.

If the King should invite him to dinner he will go in traditional loincloth and sandals.

Wife, Chauffeur Accused In Ex-Navy Man's Suicide

SAN FRANCISCO, March 28.—(AP.)—The gnawing of a green-eyed monster which thrust itself into the life of Emory Winship, retired naval officer and inventor, as the result of an alleged affair between his attractive young wife and the family chauffeur, today bore the official blame for Winship's suicide here a week ago.

A coroner's jury returned its verdict yesterday after hearing the testimony of friends and servants, including Ray McGunigle, the chauffeur, and the vehement denial of Mrs. Dorothy Blount Winship that McGunigle had been anything more to her than a chauffeur.

Witnesses told how Winship said he found his young wife in her chauffeur's bedroom on the early morning of Friday, March 13, after a party at which drinks were served. A week later, after brooding, during which he said he was driven "by mad impulses to take two or more lives," the former dashing naval officer shot himself through the head.

Mrs. Winship and McGunigle denied the charge. They explained Mrs. Winship had gone to the chauffeur's room early in the morning to ask him to prepare to move her from the apartment.

G. O. P. RANKS TORN BY DIXIE'S ANTI-HOOVER REVOLT

Col. Mann Admits Rebels Will Seek 'New Order'; Curtis May Retire for Roosevelt

By FULTON LEWIS
Universal Service

WASHINGTON, March 28.—A bitter war was on in the Republican party today as administration backers battled to hold Dixie—and its 232 convention votes—from the anti-Hoover revolt of the powerful southern Republican bloc led by Col. Horace Mann.

Spokesmen for the administration have revealed they have been working for months to combat Mann's influence in the South.

C. Bascom Slemp, National committeeman from Virginia insisted that except for a few votes the Southern delegation will ride the Hoover bandwagon at the next Republican National Convention.

Robert H. Lucas, executive secretary of the Republican National committee, declared party headquarters here has known for some time of the Mann organization, but was not aware it was directed at Hoover.

BOTH PARTIES TORN

Following Universal Service's exclusive disclosure yesterday of Mann's mutiny against a Hoover renomination, the G. O. P. found itself in a situation paralleling that of the Democratic party—both fighting against revolutions below the Mason-Dixon line.

In the Democratic party the fight is being led by Senator Joe Robinson against Raskob and Shouse.

Mann, who managed the Southern campaign for Hoover in the 1928 convention and who swung the South for the first time since the Civil War, today confirmed his intention to lead Southern delegates in a demand "for a new order of things" in 1932.

This "new order," it is learned authoritatively, constitutes absolute instructions to the 232 delegates to back the name of ex-President Coolidge against Hoover.

CURTIS OUT OF RACE?

Aroused by reports that President Hoover is seriously considering Gov. Theodore Roosevelt, of Porto Rico, as his running mate in 1932, friends of Vice President Curtis today had determined to have a show-down when the President returns to Washington next week.

In the event the President desires to change horses in midstream, so to speak, Curtis is expected to step aside and enter the senatorial contest in Kansas for his old seat in the Senate, now held by Senator George McGill, a Democrat.

Republicans declare that there is a battle on over the national chairmanship now held by Senator Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, between Secretary of War Hurley—who, it is asserted, accompanied the President on the Caribbean Sea trip to discuss his availability as national chairman—and Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, of Ohio.

RAIN DISPELS SNOW THREAT

Rain which descended over the Pittsburgh district early today minimized the threat of snow here, according to Weatherman W. S. Brotzman. Rain was predicted for tonight and early Sunday, with snow flurries tomorrow afternoon.

The rain was centered over Illinois and other parts of Central United States early today.

Iowa reported four to seven inches of snow this morning. Galveston, Tex., reported 36 degrees, the lowest temperature in its history. Pittsburgh's temperature of 49 this morning was regarded as normal.

TAMMANY MAY RUN SMITH

ALBANY, N. Y., March 28.—(AP.)—The Knickerbocker Press today said it had learned from "unimpeachable sources" that "Tammany is ready to support former Gov. Alfred E. Smith for Democratic presidential nomination in 1932 and discard Gov. Roosevelt."

The newspaper said this was learned after the two-day conference of former Gov. Smith, John H. McCooey, Brooklyn leader; Edward J. O'Connell, Albany; Joseph Murphy, Rensselaer; John J. Curry and Mayor Burns, of Troy, at the home of Mr. Murphy. The paper said:

"The combination has agreed to go to the front in defense of any investigation of the administration of Mayor James J. Walker.

"Further, it will attempt to wrest from Gov. Roosevelt his hold on the state Democratic organization and seek its absolute control."

CAMPAIGN FOES HIT BY PINCHOT

HARRISBURG, March 28.—(AP.)—Gov. Pinchot last night declared efforts of utility and transportation officials to defeat him during both his political campaigns of last year was convincing evidence that his election would spoil things for them. In his weekly radio talk from the Executive Mansion he declared:

"To prevent my election they squandered money like drunken sailors.

"Gen. Atterbury of the Pennsylvania Railroad and heads of many other transportation companies and public utilities urged Republicans to vote for a Democratic candidate for governor, assuring them his election would mean that the state government would carry on.

TRADE BOARDS TO ASSAIL P. S. C.

The Allied Boards of Trade will prepare a formal complaint against the Public Service Commission and submit it to the investigating committee of the state House of Representatives, Harry Bastow, president, declared last night.

He said the Allied Boards have been assembling information to be presented to the committee for several days.

The formal complaint will be made at the request of the committee. At its meeting last Wednesday the Allied Boards voted to assist in the investigation of the Public Service Commission by presenting evidence to support charges that the commission has been guilty of favoritism in handling the 25-cent bus fare case. The committee's request followed receipt of a letter from the boards asking for a hearing.

The Allied Boards asserted the commission disregarded the law in placing the burden of proof on the complainants in their interim report on the bus case. They also insisted the commission failed to make proper findings of fact and disregarded evidence in ruling in favor of the policy of the Pittsburgh Railways Company and the Pittsburgh Motor Coach Company.

BANDIT YOUTH SCOFFS AT WOUNDS

Chero and Schmnitzer Raise Question Which One Killed New York State Trooper

McALESTER, Okla., March 28.—(AP.)—Stanley Chero, youthful desperado accused of slaying John E. Frey, New York state trooper, the night of March 18, lay dangerously wounded in the Oklahoma penitentiary hospital here today, and scoffed at his injuries.

An operation performed last night on his shattered leg to prevent spread of an infection gave him doctors said, a "better chance" for life.

Chero was wounded Wednesday night as he attempted to escape after being arrested with William Schemnitzer in a stolen automobile. Both the youths are from Broughton, Pa., near Pittsburgh.

YOUTH CONFIDENT

Although Chero made light of his injuries, Dr. J. A. Munn, McAlester surgeon, who assisted Dr. C. M. Pearce, county physician, in the operation, said his condition was "extremely serious." Chero told County Attorney Frank Watson:

"I will make a common confession, but I won't make a dying declaration. I don't think I am going to die."

Watson's effort to get Chero to sign a written confession failed.

The question of who fired the shot that killed Frey was thrown in doubt, as Chero and Schemnitzer altered their stories, each trying to show that the other was responsible. Previously, Schemnitzer's story that Chero shot the trooper was corroborated by Chero, but he later asked police:

"What caliber bullet was found to have killed Frey? If it was a .45 I didn't kill him."

DESCRIBES SHOOTING

Chero's description of the shooting as officers related it was:

"The sergeant (Frey) and I were in the car they arrested us with, following Schemnitzer and Updyke in the patrol car.

"While he was driving, with the lights out, I grabbed my .38 caliber pistol from a secret place under the dash board and ordered him out of the car.

"I caught up with the other car and made the officer with Schemnitzer give him his service pistol. Then Frey came up and in the shooting that followed he was killed."

Whether Schemnitzer will be returned to New York at once or held here pending Chero's recovery was expected to be decided today.

Both have indicated they would waive extradition.

Judge Scores Jury For Freeing Three

Visiting Judge Miles I. Potter, of Union, denounced a Criminal Court jury for acquitting three men on a robbery charge, before ending his engagement in Pittsburgh yesterday. The men acquitted are Martin Antczak and Vincent Dispenze, of McKeesport, and Matthew Finell, of Rankin. Judge Potter asked the jurors:

"If juries are going to go on finding defendants not guilty in cases as clear as this, how do you expect the courts and law officers will ever be able to rid the country of banditry?"

the chief engineer. I received many recommendations from people, from the public and men in the administration."

VERBAL RECOMMENDATIONS

Evans then asked how the inspectors on construction jobs were appointed. Lang said the recommendations were mostly verbal. He said:

"We have a lot of inspectors who are really laborers. I fell heir to most of these inspectors and a good many other things. If there is evidence of fraud, I remove them, and when I fire them they stay fired. Every man who is discharged is given a hearing by me."

Evans asked Lang if he knew that at least 10 per cent of the contracts in 1927 and 1928 showed increases in the final estimates of more than 10 per cent.

DEPENDS MUCH ON AIDES

Lang answered that he signed all contracts, but admitted that he depended heavily on the loyalty and honesty of the men under him. Lang said his attention had been attracted by the increased estimates and that he talked them over with Reppert and Reed. Where they were explained satisfactorily, he said, he passed them.

Councilman Charles Anderson asked:

"Do you make all appointments in your department? Is there no one higher?"

Lang answered:

"I make practically 99 per cent of the appointments."

Samuel Eccles, chief engineer for the State Highway Department, testified peculiar soil conditions in Pittsburgh made it difficult to make accurate preliminary estimates. He also declared broken stone sub-base was frequently necessary to make a good street job.

Shoecraft, expert witness for Evans, completed his testimony, describing his impressions of his tour of five of the construction jobs which had been questioned. He admitted the topography of Pittsburgh presented unusual engineering difficulties.

BURGLARS FLEE AT GUN POINT

Three amed men who last night threatened James B. Lutterell, 60, a roomer in the home of Mrs. Wallace Borland, widow of a city treasurer, of 1218 Heberton avenue, were being sought by East End police today.

Returning home, Lutterell turned on the lights and the trio, who had ransacked a room on the second floor, ran downstairs. The robbers threatened Lutterell with revolvers, he told police.

The gunmen, who jimmied a rear window of the house, obtained clothing and jewelry of an unestimated value.

Two men jumped from an automobile at Brownsville and Calhoun avenues last night and snatched a purse from Mrs. S. H. Gilbert, of 1212 Amanda avenue. The bag contained $5 and a downtown department store charge account check.

A hand bag containing a nurse's uniform was stolen from the home of Mrs. Louise Long at 215 South Euclid avenue during the night, police were informed.

Several hundred persons attended.

Farm and Vet Appropriations By Congress Blamed for Deficit; Urges Wheat Sale

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Charges of cowardice on the part of Congress, which he declares is truckling to farm and veteran organizations, and a bitter attack on the previous policies of the Federal Farm Board featured a statement made by Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, upon his return here from a brief vacation in Bermuda.

If the political psychology of the legislative powers of the country is changed in regard to making large appropriations for governmental activities sponsored in the name of relief, Senator Reed declared, the present rate of taxation will suffice for all ordinary expenses of government next year.

WELCOMES FARM STAND

He welcomed the determination of the Farm Board not to attempt further stabilization of 1931 wheat as evidence that the administration has come to the realization that prosperity is not subject to "artificial" resuscitation. He expressed the opinion that the Farm Board has no reason for further existence.

Upon the wheat and cotton price-fixing attempt and upon the emergency adjusted compensation act by which the borrowing capacity of veterans was increased to 50 per cent of the face value of their certificates, Senator Reed placed direct responsibility for the Treasury deficit, which he described as "appalling."

URGES WHEAT SALE

He advocated the gradual sale by the Farm Board of the more than 200,000,000 bushels of wheat which it purchased in maintaining the price level of the product. At the same time, he admitted that no matter what action is taken by the board to dispose of the surplus on its hands, injury would be done the wheat industry.

He declared he favored sale at the best price obtainable and in the manner least likely to disturb wheat conditions of the world.

Senator Reed condemned the manner in which Congress allowed itself to be influenced in enactment of legislation authorizing extraordinary expenditures for relief, and charged the body with being "too cowardly" to stand up against the blocs supporting measures that place great burdens upon the Treasury.

TAX RAISE NOT NEEDED

Reed declared:

"I see no need of increasing rates of taxation, either income taxes or estate taxes, if the coming Congress will oppose demands to those for agricultural price-fixing and for increased veterans' loans.

"Our deficit this year will be about $750,000,000. Practically all of this comes from the money lost through the Farm Board and the money loans to veterans not in distress. The present tax rates will yield enough for all ordinary expenses of government. If Congress will develop the courage to say 'no,' it will not need to increase taxes.

"If we had restricted our aid to farmers to those in need of seed loans because of the drought, everyone would have approved. If we had limited our loans to soldiers in distress everyone would have approved."

Coolidge Sees Drought Aid Proof of People's Power

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., March 28.

To the Editor of The Sun-Telegraph:

The inherent strength of the people and their great recuperative power have been demonstrated again in these recent months in a most impressive way by the American Red Cross. When the drought left a considerable area of our country stricken, the Red Cross officials at once came forward with the explicit declaration that their organization was able to give suitable relief. They asked the public for $10,000,000, which was handsomely oversubscribed. Under their experienced care those in want were fed, clothed and given medical attention. This system of organized voluntary aid met the situation. Normal conditions are returning in the affected territory. Some of it reported better off than usual. The loss is regrettable but the national benefit from the exercise of the charitable spirit is large compensation.

Mr. Coolidge

If this stood alone it would be remarkable. But it came at a time when nearly every locality had its own problem. Yet the whole nation responded. It turned out that the best resource of the people is themselves. Left alone without the paralyzing interposition of the government the people have a better opportunity for progress, prosperity and happiness than can ever be secured from any official bureau.

Ex-Marine Won't Return To Job of Island King

NEW YORK, March 28.—(AP.)—King Faustin II, of La Gonave, is in New York.

His majesty is a blond, square-faced young man, soft-spoken and gentle of manner. Outside his kingdom he is known as former Sergt. Faustin Wirkus, of the United States Marines.

For three years, 1926-1929, King Faustin II reigned over 12,000 black subjects on an island 12 miles off the coast of Haiti.

Telling how he settled native disputes, he said today:

"Most of the disputes arose from there being more women on the island than men. I'd ask the man which woman he wanted for his wife. Then I'd tell him sternly to take the one he wanted but that I thought he was foolish. That would help to soothe the feelings of the jilted one."

King Faustin II had been with the Marines in Haiti 10 years when he volunteered for an assignment in La Gonave. A year after he arrived the inhabitants made him king. There is a queen on the island, but the king did not become her husband. He was obliged to abdicate in 1929, when the Marines transferred him back to Haiti. He's out of the service but thinks his future sojourns in his kingdom will be limited to visits. After a visit to his old home in Pittston, Pa., he wants to go exploring in Central America.

Milliken, who is heir to one-fourth of his father's estate, was married at Miami Beach, Fla., February 28, 1929, to Miss Mildred McCloy, of Pittsburgh. It was his second marriage, his first wife having obtained a divorce in 1927. The second Mrs. Milliken filed suit for divorce February 16.

Weather Conditions.

The disturbance that was centered over the Lower Mississippi Valley yesterday morning moved rapidly northward. This morning it is centered over Northern Illinois, lowest barometer, 29.46 inches, at Chicago. It produced moderately heavy rains over the Central Valley states and light rains over the Atlantic states. The southwestern high pressure spread southward, but did advance farther east. A ridge now extends from Manitoba southward the plains states to Southern Texas. It is still attended by cold weather, although the temperatures are moderating in the Northwest and over the Rocky Mountain states. There was a marked fall in temperature over the southern plains and Lower Mississippi Valley states with below-freezing temperatures in Northern Texas and frost in Southern Texas.

Actors and theater people knew "Shimmy" and had seen him "pull through" other fights and were shocked when they learned of his death. They will attend the last rites for their dog friend.

Elinor Smith May Have Set a New Record Before Crash

GIRL FLIER WILL TRY AGAIN

After Sobbing, Aviatrix Recovers Poise Following 23,000-Foot Drop in Plane

NEW YORK, March 28.—(AP.)—Elinor Smith, girl aviator, had a thrill, a crackup, a good cry and maybe a record regained in her history today.

The barograph of the plane in which she dived from a dizzy height over New York yesterday after a try for the altitude record has been sent to Washington for calibration.

William Ward, representative of the National Aeronautical Association, who examined the barograph, said there was a possibility Miss Smith went higher than the 28,734 feet mark set for women by Miss Ruth Nichols.

The altimeter of Miss Smith's plane showed only 23,000 feet, but Ward said the instrument might have stopped functioning at that height. The barograph indicated her 30-minute climb was almost in a straight line.

Starting from Roosevelt Field yesterday, Miss Smith fainted at the top of her climb for lack of oxygen, plunged to 2,000 feet before regaining consciousness, glided to a small clearing in a clump of woods near Roosevelt Field and nosed over to avoid hitting a tree.

She was dazed, unhurt. A cry and a cup of coffee and she announced she would try again next week.

GIRL RETURNS; STORY PROBED

City detectives today were checking the story of Olive Davis, 12, of 1005 Wymore street, Elliott, who, back home after disappearing March 17, told police she had spent several days on a farm near Punxsutawney with several men. She will be questioned Monday by attaches of the Missing Persons Bureau.

The girl, who had been reported kidnaped, was turned over to police late yesterday by a woman resident of Mt. Washington. The mystery of the girl's disappearance had been deepened by a telephone call reported to have been made to the Davis home by a woman. The anonymous voice, it was reported, declared that if Olive's absence was given publicity, the child would be killed.

Police, who made a partial check on the girl's story today, announced there were discrepancies in it. Detectives planned to question her further.

Purchase of Book To Cost Pastor $5,000

CHICAGO, March 28.—(AP.)—A book entitled "A Night in a Moorish Harem" may cost the Rev. Philip Yarrow $5,000.

The superintendent of the Illinois Vigilance Association, whose agent purchased the book from Walter Shaver, bookseller, was found guilty of malicious prosecution last night and was ordered to pay the $5,000 as damages.

5 STATES FIGHT TO TRY BURKE

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., March 28.—(INS.)—Gov. Henry S. Caulfield today was to hear the claims of five states for Fred Burke, accused of at least a dozen murders, and decide which commonwealth will have the opportunity of trying him.

Burke, characterized by police of half a dozen cities as "the most dangerous man alive," is wanted in Chicago for the mass murder of seven "Bugs" Moran gangsters on St. Valentine's Day, 1929; for the machine-gunning of Frankie Uale in New York, and for the murder of a policeman at St. Joseph, Mich.

Illinois and Michigan apparently were the leading contenders for the right to try Burke first, and indications were he will be turned over to Michigan authorities when Gov. Caulfield makes his decision, inasmuch as Chicago police are said to have recommended that he be extradited to Michigan.

Man Attacks Sons, Commits Suicide

HONOLULU, March 28.—(AP.)—His mind apparently deranged by losses in Wall street, Dudley W. Wallace, former broker of Montclair, N. J., died from self-inflicted rifle wound after he battered the heads of his two sons with a hatchet.

The two boys, Dudley, Jr., 13, and Donald, 9, were attacked while they slept. Hospital authorities said they might die. A daughter, Barbara, 11, escaped and gave the alarm as Mrs. Wallace returned from a parent-teachers' association meeting.

BRITISH AUTHOR BENNETT DEAD

LONDON, March 28.—(INS.)—The world of modern literature today mourned the death of Enoch Arnold Bennett, 64-year-old British novelist, who passed away at his residential hotel in the heart of London.

Although a veteran writer of prodigious literary output, he continued to hold a leading part in modern literature. Last fall he added to his long list of successful books "Imperial Palace."

Bennett was 64 years old. He believed in work before pleasure, but participated extensively in London's social whirl and lived in one of its ultra-modern apartment hotels.

Critics agree that "The Old Wives' Tales" and "Clayhanger" remain his greatest achievements.

He spent much time in France, and fell ill there after Christmas. A few days ago, after his return to London, it was announced he was suffering from typhoid. A blood transfusion failed to aid him, and he died at 9 p. m. yesterday.

TRIAL WITNESS AIDS BROTHERS

CHICAGO, March 28.—(INS.)—The trial of Leo V. Brothers for the gangland murder of Alfred Lingle, Chicago Tribune reporter, today stood adjourned for the week-end as defense attorneys completed their plans for the approaching climax of the legal battle.

A policeman who previously had identified another man as the fleeing killer of the reporter injected a bizarre angle into the trial when he blandly testified yesterday that the murderer of Lingle was a "vision" instead of man of flesh and blood.

This unexpected turn brought a smile to the defendant's lips and brought the prediction from Brothers' attorneys that an acquittal was assured.

The defense probably will begin presentation of its case by Tuesday, after the prosecution has called two more witnesses and two physicians who treated Policeman Anthony Ruthy for the cause of his "illusions."

Facial Operation For Tellegen Reported

NEW YORK, March 28.—(AP.)—Perhaps the lady was joking. After reading a telegram of regret from Lou Tellegen that he could not attend a luncheon of authors (Lou wrote a book), Edith M. Stern, the hostess, said: Mr. Tellegen has recently undergone a facial renovation operation. His doctor advises him that his face is still just a shade too pink and that a bit of retouching and a few minor alterations are necessary.

PHYSICIAN HURT IN CRASH DIES

Funeral arrangements were being made today for Dr. Lou M. Mitchell, 49, of 5844 Marlboro avenue, who died last night in Mercy Hospital from injuries suffered when his automobile struck the safety island in Grant street at Fourth avenue early yesterday.

Dr. Mitchell, an eye specialist and a member of the staff of Mercy Hospital, suffered a fractured skull in the crash, according to the coroner's report.

GUN GIRL, 3 MEN DENIED BAIL

PHILADELPHIA, March 28.—(AP.)—Mary Kovack, 17-year-old gun girl, who telephoned police to come and get her and then confessed, authorities said, to seven holdups, was held without bail today for a further hearing.

Three men she had implicated—Robert Widdows, 29; Robert Jackson, 23, and the latter's brother, William, 21—also were held without bail. The men gave Philadelphia addresses.

The girl, whose home is in Creighton, Pa., near Pittsburgh, told authorities she was "tired of playing the game for the rest of the gang." She then led the police to a rooming house where the three men and another young woman were arrested. The other woman—Julia Byrne, 25, also of Creighton—was detained for further investigation. She said she was the wife of William Jackson.

The girl said she had come here about a month ago from Creighton, where her mother and a twin brother live. She said an older brother was serving a 2 to 20-year term in Allegheny County for robbery.

Scramble to Find Hoover Loses Ship in 'War'

By GEORGE E. DURNO
International News Service.

ABOARD THE U. S. S. ARIZONA, en route to Hampton Roads, March 28. — President Hoover had first-hand information today on the highly controversial problem of the future naval value of heavy sea fighters after watching two modern steel giants engage in a theoretical death struggle.

Plowing northward through heavy seas on the homeward voyage from the West Indies, the battleship Arizona was suddenly set upon by the Dupont, an escorting destroyer.

The heavy guns of the Arizona "sank" the enemy craft without much trouble.

The Dupont then was ordered to represent another type of heavy fighting craft and launch a surprise attack from a new angle. This time President Hoover inadvertently caused the United States Navy the "loss" of the Arizona. In the rush to get ready for the attack, President Hoover disappeared. Officers and men began a search for him.

It was discovered he had been locked below deck under battened hatches. While the involuntary prisoner was being released and hurriedly brought on deck to observe the action, the Dupont slipped up on the Arizona and in two broadsides theoretically sent her to the bottom of the sea.

It was learned shortly after the maneuvers that a falling gunshutter crushed the ankle of Marine Private G. C. Carpenter, Charleston, W. Va. He was taken to the sick bay.

STATE CASE IN SLAYING TIGHTENED

Ex-Patrolman's Wife Says He Sold Gun to Martin; Visit To Death Scene Described

CLEVELAND, March 28.—(AP.)—With "Pittsburgh Hymie" Martin further linked to the scene of the slaying of former Councilman William E. Potter, the state today strode toward another crucial point of its case—ownership of the gun which killed the politician.

The state has two women witnesses to connect the murder gun with Martin. They are Mrs. Ruth M. Lieberman, wife of former Patrolman Morris Lieberman, and Mrs. Lucille Dymiticuk, of Lorain, former nurse in the Lieberman home here. Both have asserted Lieberman said he sold the gun to Martin.

Lieberman denied their statements, and one of the state's attorneys said he doubted whether their testimony could be introduced.

FOUR AGAINST HYMIE

Four witnesses yesterday strengthened the state's claim that Martin knew Potter and visited the East Side apartment where the former councilman was slain the night of February 3.

Traffic Patrolman Andrew Bessick testified he saw Martin, Potter and a third man in conversation on the street the afternoon of February 3.

Charles Stalker, long an acquaintance of Potter, said he had followed the three men to Bessick's intersection, hoping to talk with Potter. Potter had introduced Martin to him a short time before, he asserted.

GIRLS TESTIFY

Martin's alleged visits to the murder scene were told by Betty Gray—who lived in the apartment below the one in which Potter's body was found—and Queen Esther Morgan, 16-year-old high school girl who also lived in the building.

Mrs. Gray, who had been kept in hiding by police, furnished the sensation of the day by declaring Martin was the man she admitted to the building two days before the murder. Later she heard him in the apartment above, she said, and at about 7:30 that night she heard a thump. It was then, the state claims, that Potter was killed.

OUST STUDENTS IN RUM QUIZ

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., March 28.—(AP.)—Closing a week of investigation into alleged liquor parties and misconduct at recent fraternity dances, the Indiana University Student Affairs Committee announced it had expelled 16 students and had penalized three social organizations.

Names of the students and organizations involved were withheld. Dr. C. E. Edmondson, dean of men and chairman of the committee composed of 13 faculty members, said none of the organizations would be ordered to close its doors. The penalty was understood to consist of loss of social privileges.

Investigation by university officials was started after reports were circulated that there had been drinking and misconduct at fraternity house dances recently.

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, O., March 28.—(AP.)—John G. Williams, 47, Glendive, Mont., described by county authorities as a "tramp," was shot and critically wounded near Belmont, O., by Louis S. Bernard, 33. Williams was removed to a Martins Ferry hospital with a shotgun wound in his stomach. Sheriff Howard Duff said he was informed Bernard's children had been frightened by Williams and that when Bernard ordered him to move on, Williams drew a knife and Bernard fired.

PATRICIA PITT'S SPRIGHTLY COMMENT ON PITTSBURGH'S SOCIETY HAPPENINGS

Miss Doyle To Make Debut

One Sunday during the Yuletide season I talked about some of the girls who'll be debutantes of the season of 1931. And today I know of another added to the list, charming young Virginia Doyle, daughter of the Charles L. Doyles, of Vinecre, Woodland road, Sewickley. Her mother hasn't yet made any definite plans for Virginia's debut.

Of interest to many people is the news that Elizabeth McGinley, of Boston, daughter of Thomas A. McGinley, of Sewickley, will be a debutante next winter in the Hub City. She may be presented in Pittsburgh, too, by her father.

Wilhelmina Coyle probably will be a debutante next winter, too.

DOUBLE-BREASTED COATS FASHIONABLE FOR SPRING

Sketched in Paris

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, March 28.—There is more than a single version of the double-breasted coat. It is a fashion that is so well liked by women that it is being presented not only in the plain tweed everyday utility coat, but in the more elaborate or formal model. It is a delightful fashion and has the fortunate characteristic of giving line to the figure. But despite this, it is a mode that looks its best when worn by the trim, slender figure.

* * *

IT WILL BE much to the fore this spring and its trig, tailored look combined with a definite old-world charm should bespeak for it a hearty welcome. The formal coat, on double breasted lines, with rich fur trim and individual details, should tempt many women who were set on a suit to give their approval to the mode that demands that every well-dressed woman include a coat in her spring purchases—and a formal coat, at that.

* * *

MANY HOUSES are showing nice little blouses on tunic lines, for wear with plain skirts—decidedly ideal for country use. These little tunics are business-like in their trim way and are softened by the addition of appropriate touches, to temper the suggestion of severity. This page shows an interesting sketch of an Augustabernard version of the tunic-blouse. Of white wool etamine, it has a small black bow finishing the round collar and a narrow belt of black patent leather. The tunic has raglan shoulders and a slight flare in the cut of the peplum. It is worn over a black cloth skirt with slight fulness at one side.

* * *

THE SMART BLACK cloth coat is by Worth, who has a genius for presenting formal clothes that retain their essential simplicity. This new Worth model has three-quarter sleeves with elaborate buttoned cuffs. Long black suede gloves are worn. The shawl collar is of silver fox and the double-breasted fastening is marked by four galalith buttons. The silhouette shows a slightly fitted movement at the waistline with a gradual flare in the skirt of the garment.

REVIEWS OF NEW BILLS, HOLLYWOOD AND GOTHAM GOSSIP

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH

By William Pfarr

Grover Whalen of New York is coming over for the dinner to be given to his good friend, Mr. Burchfield, the president of Horne's, and we're all awaiting with the possibility of seeing what the men's fashions of 1938 will be, Mr. Whalen being conceded foresight of four years.

William Pfarr

To be the guest of honor rather than the host will be an unusual role for Mr. Burchfield, for he is regarded as one of the best hosts in town. One who has been to his parties reports that his programs are entertaining and different.

This same one told us what the theme song of the Burchfield dinner will be. It will be that tune you used to sing when you were young—"The Little Grasshopper Jumped Right Over Another Grasshopper's Back," to mention one of its titles.

That is Mr. Burchfield's favorite tune. If we remember correctly, the words to that tune are:

"The little grasshopper jumped right over another grasshopper's back.

"Oh, the little grasshopper jumped right over the little grasshopper's back.

"The little grasshopper jumped right over the little grasshopper's back.

"They were only playing leapfrog."

Bill Wagner, of Mt. Oliver, the former member of the Legislature, bumped into an acquaintance who, so Wagner thought, had been a permanent patient at Mayview.

"What are you doing in town?" Wagner asked.

"I just came up," the gentleman explained, "to pay my income tax."

If you know any bartenders who weigh 500 pounds or more, try to find out which one recently was imprisoned in a taxicab. No less authority than Tommy Joyce, the golfer, who is a registration commissioner on the side, knows of the man. He (the bartender) started making the rounds one night and having closed up all the late places in town, found he couldn't get his bull out of the cab. A truthful soul, Joyce insists the driver had to call mechanics, who ripped out the side of the car. The bartender stepped out, thanked everybody and went home.

The fishing season is approaching (yes, it is) and Wick Atkinson, of the city clerk's office, may consider this the pertinent time to tell of that bass he caught in Conneaut Lake. The day was dark and luck was bad but persistent Mr. Atkinson canoed and canoed, hoping for a break.

Suddenly he felt a bite on the four-inch chub he was using. He trolled along and discovered he had landed a bass. Fancy his shock when he saw the bass leap out of the waves with a 30-pound "muskie" (we don't know how to spell its correct name) in pursuit.

"Muskie" finally captured and consumed its prize, which in turn, or out of turn, had swallowed the chub. Now Mr. Atkinson and the "muskie" had a death struggle which ended when the "muskie" gave up and swam away. Mr. Atkinson then pulled in his line and found he still had the bass. Figure it out for yourself.

WILL ROGERS SAYS

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal.
March 28.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

This hero business is pretty ticklish. They are throwing rocks at Ghandi in India already. Chaplin is the sole survivor. See where the Republicans threatened to make an issue out of the carryings on of Tammany Hall. Tammany says: "Ye-eah; well, you just start, and when we open up on ——."

They claim business is getting better, because there are fewer apples being sold on the street. That only means it's getting worse.

Yours, WILL.

English Censors Do Their Work Before Cameras Begin Their Grind

By HARRISON CARROLL

(Copyright, 1931, by Premier Syndicate, Inc.)

HOLLYWOOD, March 28.

English pictures lack punch because censors devitalize them before a camera starts to grind.

This is the theory of Conway Tearle, who has just returned to Hollywood after eight months in London.

"I made a picture called 'Captivation' for an independent producer, John Harville," explains Tearle. "When they brought the script to me I suggested a number of changes to inject a little life into it. The company was agreeable, but they informed me that the censors would never give their okeh."

Conway Tearle

"They are much stricter upon native companies than upon the American films coming in. As a result, you get only lightweight stories from England."

Salaries of the English stars are about half what they are in Hollywood, Tearle declares. Few players receive more than $1,000 a week. On the stage, $600 a week is a big salary.

Motion picture patrons, on the other hand, pay more for their entertainment. First-run houses, running program pictures, charge $1.75 for the best seats.

"If the censorship restrictions are ever lowered, you will see an entirely different sort of film come out of England," predicts Tearle. "They have the ability and the willingness over there. There simply are too many don'ts."

Fully recovered from her recent illness, Dolores del Rio is expected to sign a long-term contract at R. K. O. within the next few days. Several studios have evinced an interest in the star, but I have it on good authority she will accept the offer of William LeBaron.

In the meanwhile, there remains "The Dove," which she is supposed to make at United Artists. This film is on and off the studio schedule, until it seems impossible to determine its actual fate. If production does get under way, however, Dolores will do this, apart from her contract with any other studio.

It has been a year now since the Mexican star made a picture. Her last was "The Bad One," filmed by United Artists, in March, 1930.

Walter Huston's son has been signed by Samuel Goldwyn to write scenarios for United Artists. The lad has had an arrangement to split all his literary commissions with his father, who staked him until he could sell his stories . . . Paramount has turned thumbs down on the proposals of several fan magazines to take "straight" pictures of the Marx Brothers . . .

Wallace Beery Walter Huston

Wallace Beery has trained a canary to sit on his shoulder and sing three tunes . . . Wildest story of the day is about the writer who got a job at a studio because he could cook a special kind of spaghetti for the executive's lunch . . . In two weeks, Knute Rockne will be here to prepare for his sports series with Universal . . . Cecil B. De Mille faces quite a comedown in "The Squaw Man." The only bathtub he could get into the picture was a tin one.

Plays, Players and By-Play

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"Green Grow The Lilacs," final Theater Guild play of the season, will harbinger spring in the Nixon next week, with Franchot Tone and June Walker and a flock of cowboys and cowgirls among the greeters. The cow savants will prove their expertness in that line by bursting into melody now and anon. Mr. Tone, last here as a budding evangelist in "Pagan Lady," now is a leather jerker with suede pants and a Tommix hat.

When "Blossom Time" arrives April 4 to spend two week-ends and intervening portions of the calendar in the Alvin, we shall hear some prime Romberg music that was written by Franz Schubert. Sig. modestly claims credit for only the adaptation, which is very generous considering Schubert has been dead a long time and couldn't kick anyway. It will be vitalized and vocalized by a group of gleesters including John Charles Gilbert, Gladys Baxter and Greta Alpeter.

The glass house resident gets the usual reward of stone-hurlers from transparent domiciles in "The Eternal Magdalene," whose eternity in the Pitt will be exactly six nites and two mats next week. Mollie Cohn, who has emoted in Yiddish drama to such an extent that her name is a synonym for heart-jerks or sump'n will be the guest star of George Sharp's stationary troupers.

Every cloud has a silver lining to the actor who is "up" in his lines.

MR. TIBBETT APPEARS AS MODERN HOBO IN ALDINE

"The Prodigal," new film starring Lawrence Tibbett, is current in the Aldine. This time Tibbett turns his back on costume drama and steps forth as a modern hobo. And he makes a grand tramp.

The title comes from the fact that Tibbett's hobo, who is the blacksheep son of an aristocratic family, turns up at his old home. There, the only persons glad to see him are his mother and his brother's wife. This brother is really a blackguard. He even slaps his wife in the face.

The picture is presented with simplicity and humor. There are laughs when the prodigal returns and his mother proceeds to give him a bath. More laughs are there also in the presence of that drawling Negro comic, Stepin Fetchit.

Esther Ralston has the heroine role. She portrays brother's wife. And when she sees Tibbett for the first time she knows she married the wrong man.

A couple of Tibbett's tramping cronies appear at the southern homestead and, if they add nothing to the aristocratic atmosphere, they hand out the comedy in the grand manner.

Tibbett sings several songs, and one, offered with the assistance of a Negro chorus, is impressive.

BRASS BAND GREETS TEXAS STEERS IN NEW PICTURE

By MILDRED FILLMORE

'Tis the western stuff again on exhibition on the screens in both the Fulton and the Sheridan Square. The picture is titled "The Conquering Horde," and Richard Arlen is the boy who gets Fay Wray, the girl.

Cattle are glorified in this picture. A herd of 5,000 are greeted by a brass band. About the only thing they don't get is a "key to the city." But a train comes along, frightens them into a stampede and they take the town anyway.

Texas is the setting for the action and the time is those days following the close of the Civil War. Bad men are on the loose. Indians are on the warpath and the U. S. Cavalry does some heroic riding.

Conditions are bad in Texas. Ranchers can't get a market for their cattle and, in other ways, the country is in more or less of an uproar. So the President of the United States sends a trusted agent to Texas—none other than young Mr. Arlen. He copes with the situation in a big style and eventually gets the girl.

But, be all this as it may, the nicest thing that can be said about "The Conquering Horde," is that it is just another melodrama of the large open spaces. And you know how those spaces are—in the movies!

'HONOR AMONG LOVERS' IS WELL-DRESSED ANCIENT PLOT

By GEORGE SEIBEL

When Claudette Colbert is heroine of a screen romance, the dressmaker is important. She has provided Claudette with a gorgeous variety of every sort of confection, from smart office suits as a private secretary to silky lingerie as a wife. After that a title had to be found. "Honor Among Lovers" is a good title. Last a story also had to be provided. It's the good old plot of the girl who marries the wrong man because she thinks she loves him, and turns to his rival when she finds out what a low cad her husband really is.

George Seibel

What the dressmaker did for Claudette, the tailor has done for Fredric March. He is faultlessly attired and gets more heroic and self-sacrificing as the picture in the Penn Theater is unreeled.

IN POLITE SOCIETY

This is indeed the politest of polite society. Nobody works except Charles Ruggles trying to get a drink. March makes millions by never coming to his office except when he has a lunch with Claudette, his pretty secretary. After the plot has turned into the lane of "Paid in Full," he is shot by the drunken and jealous husband, but of course he recovers. And keeps up his record for unselfishness by clearing the cad and thief when it comes to trial.

All this is life as the folks in Paducah and Podunk imagine life to be in the Great and Wicked City. High finance, highballs and high jinks! Immaculate clothes—clinking kisses—elegant manners—elastic morals!

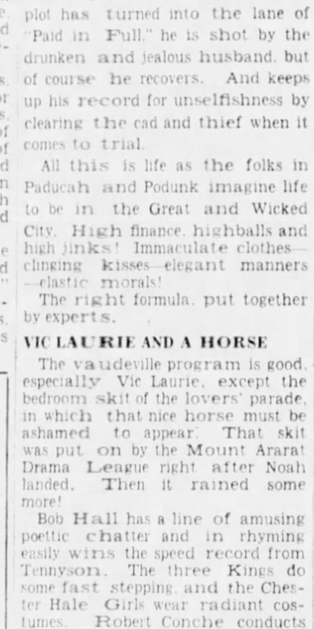
The right formula, put together by experts.

VIC LAURIE AND A HORSE

The vaudeville program is good, especially Vic Laurie, except the bedroom skit of the lovers' parade, in which that nice horse must be ashamed to appear. That skit was put on by the Mount Ararat Drama League right after Noah landed. Then it rained some more!

Bob Hall has a line of amusing poetic chatter and in rhyming easily wins the speed record from Tennyson. The three Kings do some fast stepping, and the Chester Hale Girls wear radiant costumes. Robert Conche conducts his orchestra prettily through "Samson and Dalilah," with Lois Miller as the pleasing vocalist. And Dick Leibert has some new songs for his organ—songs getting gushier, mushier and slushier all the time.

Dancer



Velodia Vestoff, dancer, is a special feature heading the Show Boat offering, presented under title, "Karnival Kapers."

Man About Town

Wonder whatever became of that merciless traffic cop who used to Stop and Go motorists at Columbus Circle? . . . Wasn't he the one, though? . . . Anything to make you miserable . . . Or make your face get as red as La Joyce's fingernails . . . He wouldn't waste his time giving you a ticket if you made a wrong turn or passed a light . . . Which would have been preferable to his ridicule . . . His system of curing law violators was to motion them to the curb, and then when he thought he had attracted a large enough audience, he yelled (between forced laughter): "Look! Look! He don't know how to drive!!!" . . . The third night at "The Wonder Bar" the spectators yelled themselves hoarse and pounded their paws until they must have ached . . . Because Jolson sang "Mammy," "Sonny Boy" and "April Showers."

"Now if you had only sung those songs at the premiere," he was told, "I would have been thrilled no end" . . . "If I had," Jolson whimpered, "the critics would have said I had nothing new."

Kreisler and Paderewski's best tunes, he was reminded, were written by Beethoven, Lizst, Wagner and Chopin.

Nearly all the wits of the stage and screen gathered in a late-spot last night.

"It must be a cinch for you," someone observed, "with all these clowns in one place. Why, you ought to pick up a dozen column loads."

Sometimes, perhaps . . . More often you get a headache listening to the paragraphs you've heard, read or used . . . Bugs Baer explained that he didn't submit anything to that cigaret contest, which offered a huge award for the best letter explaining what was different about the package, but that if he did, he would say that the package is now harder to open . . . Jack McLallen will be held over for a third week at the Palace . . . One of the few intellects in vaudeville . . . Not long ago he was a nobody doing a roller-skating act.

It must be nice to write a song that becomes an overnight hit. . . . Swannie, of Vincent Lopez's orchestra, wrote the lyric and melody to "When Your Lover Has Gone" . . . The line in it I like best is: "Ask any lover the heartaches that romance brings" . . . It is the grandest of the current torch chunes . . . Broadway isn't the same any more . . . It now has a book store on 7th near 47th next to the Mayfair . . . Fancy that! . . . The largest shirt in the world is in the window of a haberdashery nearby . . . It would fit ten Carneras . . . That "Spanish Inquisition" store featuring paintings of tyrannies years ago gives me the shudders . . . A lotta people go in for such things, though, the shop always is so crowded. . . . Last year—didn't some religious fanatics stone the place? The fellows who used to serve Rothstein are in respectable business now—and poorer.

The corner of the Canyon at 42nd St. seems dull when the circular electric sign is turned off . . . And that 45th St. corner, the Gaiety Theater Building, looks like a tomb at night, with Ronald Colman's name in huge letters sans any light effect . . . It seems to say: "Ronald Colman's movie flopped here" . . . Those Franchies who take your hat and coat in Dinty Moore's are gay grandmothers.

"You say in your papurrr," said one of them the other night, "zat ze Franch dreenk up 25 million gallons of wine in one year. Why you don't say the trooth? Ze Americans helped, you know!"

A man drops dead while dancing in a cabaret—from natural causes . . . The plainclothes man who with four others makes the rounds of the hot-spots interviews a notorious man . . . The reporter standing by offered to shake hands with the copper, the salutation being ignored.

"Wonder why that cop didn't want to shake hands?" asked the newspaperman of the questioned one later . . . "Didn't you notice," he said, "he had his right hand in his pocket on his cannon?"

That "Sweet and Low" theatrical ads are humorous . . . Billy Rose slapped 140Gs into that revusical and overcame the stiffest barriers with sound advertising . . . He will continue them—changing the copy weekly, and when the show goes to Chicago he will "plaster the town like a circus" . . . He is following Arthur Brisbane's counsel, to-wit: "Repetition makes Reputation!" . . . He received a heavy piece of coin, too, from Otto H. Kahn, to release Hannah Williams from the show to middle-aisle with Roger . . . Rose got $5,000 to release June MacCloy from her agreement when she entered the flickers . . . He has made more coin releasing actors than other producers make with hits . . . The Hammerstein name will live on . . . The Oscar Hammerstein II being blessed with a son on the Sabbath . . . "Pick Up" is a good novel about New York, too . . . Ex-City Editor Barrett's book about The World is exciting reading . . . I liked that part about Swope best.

That cigar shop on 48th east of 7th has the most daring display of nudes . . . The women who press their noses against the window and titter are a sight . . . The tall uniformed barker in front of the Mayfair Theater takes it all so seriously . . . He boisterously raves how good the picture is . . . Wonder if he ever sees it? . . . That old lady who peddles papers in the Grand Central Terminal wears an apron featuring the name of a columnist and his paper . . . She bulges out too far in the chest, however, robbing the fellow of his billing . . . It's a boy at the Leo (Central Park Casino) Reismans.

It is sad sometimes watching parted lovers who happen to ankle into the same place—with different companions . . . Both contestants immediately become a little pale . . . You'd think that they wouldn't patronize the spots where they are most likely to encounter each other . . . They do, though . . . Appetites go limp . . . Conversation gets thin . . . And each imagines the whole place is conscious of them . . . Then there's the type of guy who gets fussy because the gal he is with sees a feller who once adored her—sitting across the way . . . This is a horrible sitch-ee-ay-shun . . . The fussy one imagines she is looking at her former "heart" too much . . . Or that the former "heart" is doing His Stuff, again—via some secret code or something . . . Balzac called love that vast excess of reason.

The newest trick was pulled on an unsuspecting husband the other midnight . . . His former rival was seated two tables away . . . The Mrs., who can't get Broadway out of her veins, simply had to chat with her one-time honey, but how? . . . So she excused herself and went to the Ladies' Reception Parlor, which has a phone coin-box . . . She got the same restaurant on the cashier's phone, and asked for the lad . . . They arranged a rendezvous for a later date . . . Some of us, who were watching the comedy-drama from our table, shook our heads and sighed:

"Gee," gee'd a sentimentalist, "I didn't know those two were close to each other" . . . And Lou Holtz niftied "They're closer than 9 and 10."

THE STANLEY OFFERS MILLIE AS MOVIE HEROINE NOW

By CLARENCE E. GRUNDISH

Millie, Donald Henderson Clarke's redheaded heroine, is on exhibition on the Stanley screen. But the movies have crowded her style. They have scrubbed her up in the bathtub of censorship. They haven't left much of the old Millie.

This is just another proof that those sexy heroines of the printed page can't live their own lives in the movies. Maybe it is just as well!

"Millie", as a novel, was sex afire. "Millie, as a picture, is sex toned-down. And what this transformation gains in morals, it loses in entertainment. But don't blame the movie-makers too much. The law of life and Emerson came before Hollywood.

AMONG THE PLAYERS

Helen Twelvetrees portrays the title role. She does it well enough, we guess. But it is a difficult job—this of reconciling story-book badness with movie goodness. Other players prominent are James Hall, Robert Ames, John Halliday, Livlan Tashman and Joan Blondell.

The picture doesn't concern itself with Millie's early life at all, but begins with her marriage. Then follows disillusionment after disillusionment for her, until she and you begin to wonder if there ever was such thing as a faithful man.

The story is episodic, with written titles stuck in to hold it together. Better direction would have made it a better picture.

THE STAGE PRESENTS

A master of ceremonies' life isn't always just a smile and a croon. Not when Nell Kelly is around. This hoodlum comedienne, who happens to be the liveliest thing about the new stage show, "Vagabond Trails," shows Dick Powell a looney time. With tie askew and hair tossed, he does manage to escape with his life. Which is an accomplishment deserving of the applause he is accorded.

Other entertainers include Kriznetzoff-Nicolina Trio; Miachanna, and Roy, Realy and Roy, all of whom go in for the song, dance and that sort of thing. A gypsy chorus, an organlogue and an overture are on the bill.

Cut Reflects Better Coal Management

By B. C. FORBES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF a reduction in the price of anthracite far beyond the change usually made on April 1 to encourage summer ordering is welcome news. It is perhaps significant news, also.

Mr. Forbes

Many readers of this column have complained that, although practically everything else has come down in price, coal has stayed up. This fact has not helped to regain good will for coal leaders or corporations. No basic American industry has been worse mismanaged for a generation than the coal industry.

This attitude was aptly reflected by "Divine Right Baer," then head of Reading; his idea was that he and other coal barons had been commissioned by God to occupy the exalted positions they occupied.

FORTUNATELY, WITHIN the last few years high-handed autocracy has been losing its grip. Reorganization of the management has been effected by most coal companies. Men more in sympathy with modern conditions, men having a better understanding of the power of public opinion, have displaced the hard-boiled, short-sighted, old-time blunderers.

Instead of the country being periodically plunged into chaos through bloody coal strikes, a greater measure of statesmanship in handling coal miners may be expected hereafter.

IN ADDITION to the substantial reduction by coal producers, there is talk of lowering freight rates for the benefit of consumers.

Past bungling brought the coal industry to an unfortunate condition. Whereas most other industries grasped the importance of instituting elaborate methods with a view to improving processes and discovering new outlets, the coal autocrats exercised no such vision. Consequently, coal has suffered from various kinds of competition—and is threatened with still keener competition in the future.

It behooves the industry, therefore, not to charge as high prices as it can get away with, but charge as low prices as are feasible.

The new cut is substantial enough to suggest that the anthracite producers are beginning to think and see more clearly and foresightedly.

'TIS FUNNY how some men's fortunes are linked through life. A leader arises, he associates with himself promising fellows, and as the leader mounts he takes his colleagues along with him. The career of Seward Prosser, able and genial head of the Bankers Trust Company, New York, is an illustration perhaps unique.

Mr. Prosser and Thomas Cochran became vice presidents of the modest Astor Trust Company in 1907. When Mr. Prosser became president of the Liberty National Bank in 1912, he chose as his assistant Harvey B. Gibson. Henry J. Cochran then was vice president of the Astor Trust.

When Mr. Prosser became president of the Bankers Trust in 1914, Thomas Cochran succeeded him as president of the Liberty. In 1917, Henry Cochran became vice president of the Bankers, and, two years ago, became president, Mr. Prosser meanwhile having become chairman. In 1914, too, Mr. Gibson followed Thomas Cochran as president of the Liberty, Mr. Cochran having then been made a partner of J. P. Morgan & Co.

THUS, OF Mr. Prosser's early associates who followed him in various positions, one is now a Morgan partner, another is president of Mr. Prosser's own institution, and the third (Mr. Gibson) recently took over control of the Manufacturers Trust Company.

Mr. Prosser himself, when a young man, was spotted and sponsored by the late Henry P. Davison, the brainiest banker New York produced in my time. Among others fostered by Harry Davison were Dwight W. Morrow and Thomas W. Lamont, the former now United States senator and the latter the principal partner of the present Mr. Morgan.

MR. LAMONT sailed last evening, with Mrs. Lamont, for Greece, on "purely a pleasure trip—not business," as he emphasized to me, because I have often told him he was killing himself with overwork.

Not a few big men get far less out of life than those of us who carry fewer responsibilities.

Trainer's Faith In Lazzy Horse Rewarded

DONCASTER, Eng.—(INS.)—Madcap, a veteran steeplechaser, has run his last race. He would have won it—but death came too soon. A few years ago Madcap ran all his races like a shirker. His owner ordered him to be shot. The death order was overheard by a trainer who begged for the horse's life.

The request was granted and as though to show his gratitude Madcap then won the majority of his races.

In his last race he collasped at the winning post, beaten only by a short head. He was placed second.

BOY, 3, RECITES MOTHER GOOSE

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia.—(INS.)—"Barber, Barber, shave a pig"—and Jerry Gregson, just past 3 years old, is launced forth on the first of the 150 poems that he can recite without the usual procedure of having an adult say the first line for him.

The lad, the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Gregson, of Marshalltown, has learned all of the poetry during the past year, and not only recites the verses, but explains what they mean. When Jerry is in the middle of "speaking a piece," and forgets momentarily, he does not stand and wrack his brain for the right words, but tells the meaning of the lines, the exact words of which he cannot remember. This serves in recalling the necessary verse to him and he continues on with his poem.

A few months ago someone remarked to Mrs. Gregson that Jerry must know a great number of verses, so the mother turned accountant and kept the list as the 3-year-old went through his pieces. Two evenings were consumed and at the end of that time 150 poems had been fully recited—without prompting.

VANADIUM CORP. INVENTORY LARGER

Supplies 70% Above Last Year; Sufficient to Meet Current Specifications

NEW YORK, March 28.—Vanadium Corporation of America's immediate outlook for earnings will depend to a large extent upon the success of its operations at the new Piney River titanium plant in Virginia, which will be ready next month.

Steel mills have been a little more active in specifying for deliveries since the first of the year, but there has been no sustained upswing in demand and current requirements can be handled easily from inventories, which have increased nearly 70 per cent over a year ago. Operations have been suspended at mines in Peru, South America, and South Africa, and sufficient material is in stock or being shipped to meet current demands.

OPERATIONS CUT

With Vanadium's present curtailed operations, the immediate effect of the recently offered $5,000,000 5 per cent debentures probably will be to restrict earnings upon the capital shares. In a period of more normal operations, the interest charges would not loom large, for the additional working capital could be employed to advantage.

At least one large paint manufacturer is definitely interested in Vanadium's titanium dioxide, which is one of the principal products being produced in Virginia, and this company probably will be an important user of the product. Titanium dioxide is used as a white pigment or base in the paint trade. Most of the requirements of this country are imported.

TITANIUM BY-PRODUCTS

Vanadium's deposit of the raw material in Virginia is the largest known in this country. Obviously much of the success of Vanadium's development will depend upon its economical mining, milling and concentrating. Vanadium's costs will be reduced in proportion to its success in marketing by-products from the original ore.

Vanadium reported net income of $1,116,983 for 1930, after federal taxes, depreciation, depletion, etc., equivalent to $3.04 a share for the 366,637 shares outstanding at the end of the year. In 1929 net income was $1,849,886, or $5.26 a share for 351,637 shares.

FOOD POISONS COOK, AIDES

NEW YORK—(INS.)—Department of Health authorities here are faced with this puzzle. What made Fred Bastian, chef of the Municipal Lodging House, and four assistants ill with ptomaine poisoning when 150 lodgers at the city institution who ate the same food escaped?

Shortly after serving the evening meal to the lodgers, Cook Bastian and his helpers ate their meals. Bastian had roast pork, potatoes, and cabbage, and his helpers, roast beef and the vegetables. A few hours later they became ill.

Most of the lodgers who were served during the evening took one or the other of the meats along with the potatoes and cabbage, although some had only the vegetables. All escaped the ill effects.

Bonds on Auction Block at Chicago

CHICAGO, March 28.—The city comptroller, dissatisfied with a bid of 93.59 for $8,145,000 worth of city improvement bonds, threw out the bids and tried an auction. The price ran up to 96.551 and the bonds were knocked down to a syndicate headed by Halsey, Stuart & Co.

AVERAGE OIL PRICE SAME

The average price of crude petroleum at 10 producing fields was unchanged last week from the preceding week, at 93.3 cents per barrel. The average for the corresponding period last year was $1.489 per barrel, according to the Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter.

Gasoline at the refineries was lower last week at 5.06 cents per gallon at four principal refining centers, compared with 5.125 cents per gallon the previous week. The average a year ago was 7.03 cents per gallon. Service station prices for gasoline at 10 leading markets was also lower last week at 15.95 cents per gallon, compared with 16.40 cents per gallon a week ago.

Domestic crude oil production from January 1 to March 21 was estimated by the above authority at 168,589,000 barrels, compared with 209,314,000 barrels during the corresponding period of 1930.

1930 MINERAL OUTPUT OFF

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Estimated total value of mineral products produced in the United States in 1930 was approximately $4,795,000,000, a decrease of 15 per cent from the 1929 value, Commerce Department reports.

The decline in value was accounted for by both lower unit prices and by a falling off in output of nearly all products. Gold showed a slight increase. Notable decreases in mineral products, ranging from 25 per cent to 50 per cent included copper, iron, silver, lead and zinc.

Estimated value of metallic products was $985,000,000, a decrease of 33 per cent from 1929. Output of non-metallic products, other than fuels, was valued at $1,028,000,000, a decrease of 15 per cent. Mineral fuels had a value of $2,782,000,000. Natural gas showed an increase but bituminous coal, natural gasoline and petroleum, recorded sharp declines.

PAINTERS PAY PACT UPHELD

Action of the scale committee on wages and working rules was approved at a meeting of the employing painters of the Pittsburgh district last night.

It was announced an arbitration committee, consisting of three employing painters, three from District No. 1, Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America, and an umpire had been named to handle future difficulties. Meetings will be held soon to settle questions on working conditions and wages.

Advance Planning By U. S. Favored

WASHINGTON, March 28.—(AP.)—Advance planning of governmental building was viewed by A. P. Greensfelder, president of the Associated General Contractors, as permitting swifter action to pull the country from the depths of depression.

Officials of the association at the first session of the new executive cabinet praised the Wagner act passed by Congress for advancing planning and regulation of public construction as "a sure means of maintaining general business stability in the future."

Loan for Chilean Nitrate Combine

LONDON, March 28.—Negotiations are nearing completion for a 7 per cent sterling bond issue on behalf of Cosach, Chilean nitrate combine. Amounts contemplated are 2,000,000 pounds to be taken by London, 500,000 pounds by Holland, 400,000 pounds by Switzerland and 100,000 pounds by Sweden.

Lumber Industry Credit Book Ready

CHICAGO, March 28.—The April issue of the new "Blue Book," the lumber industry's own credit rating manual, will be the most complete and up-to-date credit reference book ever offered the industry, it was announced by Charles J. Morgan, manager of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Credit Corporation.

Fairbanks Morse Sales Take Gain

CHICAGO, March 27.—Since the opening of the current year Fairbanks, Morse & Co. has experienced a slight upturn in sales compared with the final quarter of 1930, when there was drastic curtailment in foreign business, absence of railroad buying and decreased purchasing of oil field equipment.

Auto Equipment Business Higher

Production of automobile parts and accessories in February continued the upturn that has developed in the industry since the first of the year and indications are that March will show still further improvement, according to Motor and Equipment Association.

MARKETS NEW MACHINE

NEW YORK, March 28.—A new model automatic electric bookkeeping machine, which minimizes the chances for errors in operation due to the human equation and which is 33⅓ per cent speedier than previous models, was put on the market by Underwood Elliott Fisher Company. According to P. D. Wagoner, president, the new machine also permits considerable savings in stationery costs through reduction in in size of the bookkeeping forms used.

These improvements are made possible, Mr. Wagoner announced, though a feature not previously found in bookkeeping or accounting machines by which vertically listed figures are accumulated, at the same time automatically totaling seperate items which may be distributed out into columns as desired, without separate posting.

This machine was tested out for one of the most important automobile manufacturers, Mr. Wagoner added, and has been found to eliminate 5,000 physical operations in handling 1,000 separate posting and to permit a reduction in the width of the stationery form used from 14 inches to 7 inches.

STEEL EXPORTS TAKE DROP

WASHINGTON, March 28.—United States exports of iron and steel products totaled 91,212 gross tons in February, or 1,513 tons under the January figure of 92,745 tons, according to Commerce Department. The principal items in the February trade were scrap, 10,690 tons; plain shapes, 8,514 tons, and tinplate, 7,752 tons. Shipments to Canada of 45,081 tons, China 6,590 tons and Japan 4,882 tons, were all greater than they had been in January.

Imports of iron and steel products in February were 28,045 tons, or 12,736 tons less than January figures of 40,781 tons.

BAYREUTH 700 YEARS OLD

BAYREUTH. — (INS.) — Bayreuth's 700th anniversary as a city will be observed with simple exercises on March 28 to 31.

The city is actually much older, having probably been an important settlement more than a thousand years ago, but fire and war have destroyed most of its ancient documents, and the oldest document extant referring to Bayreuth, as a "city" dates from 1231.

The complete program for the Wagner Festival Plays, beginning with "Tannhauser" on July 21 and ending with "Parsifal" on August 19, is now available. "Tristan" and the "Ring" will be the other two works given.

THEATER BURNS IN OIL CITY

OIL CITY, Pa., March 28. — (AP.)—Fifteen minutes after the final show of the night was ended, fire broke out in the Lyric Theater, spread rapidly throughout the building and caused damage estimated by firemen at $25,000.

The theater was crowded earlier in the night when an amateur performance was featured.

Origin of the blaze, which was discovered backstage, was not determined.

The building was a one-story brick structure.

Building Activity Declines in State

HARRISBURG, March 28.—No sign of increasing activity in the building industry in Pennsylvania was apparent in the February reports to the Department of Labor and Industry from building inspection offices in 43 of the largest municipalities of the state. A total of 1,567 permits for building work to cost $2,786,529 were issued during February, 1931, as compared with 1,904 permits for work costing $6,104,987 issued during February, 1930, a decline in the volume of building for February, this year, amounting to $3,318,458, or 54.3 per cent. Only seven municipalities reported increased building for February, 1931, over the same month last year, while reports for 36 of the 43 municipalities show a decreased volume of permits for construction work.

Show Queen Dies, Two Daughters Live

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., March 28.—(AP.)—Mrs. E. C. Johnson, 31, who was chosen Pennsylvania turkey queen at last year's state farm products show, died here. Twin daughters born to Mrs. Johnson are living.

She was a daughter of Robert Lohr, former Somerset County assemblyman and owner of one of the largest turkey farms in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Johnson resided at Glessner, Somerset County.

Indiana Standard Buys Stripper Oil

CHICAGO, March 28.—Standard Oil Company of Indiana gave an order for 6,000 barrels of oil daily from Kansas stripper wells until April 14. Another order for 2,000 barrels daily after April 15, on a permanent basis, was announced. The orders resulted from a conference of oil company representatives with Gov. Harry Woodring, of Kansas, seeking a settlement of the stripper well relief problem.

HONOR VETERAN SWEEPER

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—(INS.)—For sweeping an area equivalent to a sidewalk 12 feet wide reaching from New York to San Francisco, Thomas Smith, for 30 years sweeper and tidier-up of the Lackawanna Railroad roundhouse here, has been added to the road's Honor Roll.

During his three decades as sweeper extraordinary, Tom went about his daily work stall with unusual cheerfulness and marked enthusiasm, never rode on a train outside the yard area, and never missed a day's session with the broom.

Fully 780 brooms have been worn out in the 9,360 sweepings the roundhouse received from Tom and railroad officials expressed confidence that this record makes Tom the champion sweeper of the nation, if not the world.

TRANSFER FIRM SETS SAFETY RECORD

Hubert, Owner, Holds 90% Of Accidents Avoidable; Employes Well Trained

A safety record unique in the business history of Pittsburgh has been established by George J. Hubert, owner of the Hubert Transfer & Storage Company, 1009 Bidwell street, North Side.

In the 20 years that he has been in business here, none of his moving vans has ever figured in a serious accident, there has never been any court action against him as a result of an accident by his drivers or damage to goods entrusted to his care, and the largest claim ever made against him for injury of goods in moving was for $6.85 for a broken hall mirror. He said:

"Ninety per cent of all accidents are avoidable. My employes don't have accidents because they have been trained to be forever on guard against them.

"The quality of a moving job is dependent mainly upon the 'human element.' It is with this thought in mind that I select and train my movers. Before I hire a man, I investigate him thoroughly. His past must stand a rigid inspection. After he is hired, he is made an assistant to one of the older men—an expert in his line. No man is given charge of one of my vans or trucks until he has been in my service for two years. My packers, craters and shippers likewise must prove their dependability before they are given charge of jobs.

SUPERVISES WORK

"When long trips are made, there are always two dependable men on each van. They relieve each other at the wheel. I do not allow my drivers to exhaust themselves. A tired driver is a careless driver.

"Another factor in the safety record built up by my company is that I personally supervise every moving job, from the selling and estimating to the unloading of the goods at their final destination.

WORKERS EXPERIENCED

"I maintain the closest relations and contacts with my men. I study their characters closely. Most of them have been with me 12 or 15 years. One has been with me 20 years—since the day I started in business. These men work with me, not for me, and my interests—which are the company's interests—are their interests.

"Courtesy, honesty and fairness are the first principles of my business. From the beginning, my slogan has been: 'Give the customer a little more than he pays for.'"

JAPAN IMPORTS IMPROVED

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Several Far Eastern areas show a tendency toward improvement in business sentiment, but in some instances the gains are offset by losses in other directions. The Japanese import trade has improved somewhat, but exports remain low. The gradual improvement of silver exchange, depleted warehouse stocks and seasonal factors have stimulated Chinese business to some extent, especially in the Shanghai area, but the uncertain exchange outlook prevents any substantial gain.

The results of the Round Table Conference continue to improve sentiment in British India. The Siamese rice market has been stimulated somewhat by the advance in Hong Kong exchange. Although present business remains dull in British Malaya, a hopeful undercurrent has appeared, with shortage of stocks reported in some instances. In the Netherland East Indies import business is limited to immediate requirements, and keen competition is forcing some sales at a loss. The only improvement in the Philippines consists of greater hopefulness among strong business houses.

PACKING FIRM EXPANDS

Pittsburgh has become the home of one of the outstanding independent packing organizations through the recent purchase of control of the William Zoller Company by Oswald & Hess.

The Oswald & Hess Co. bought 7,200 shares out of the 12,400 shares of William Zoller at a price of $25 a share. The plants of the two companies will continue to operate separately. Oswald & Hess does an annual business of about $4,000,000. Zoller sales total about $5,000,000 a year, so that the combined organizations will handle approximately $9,000,000 worth of meat products every year.

In spite of the uncertain conditions prevailing in the packing business during 1930, both companies have been able to operate at a profit. Zoller earned about $23,600 for its common stock last year while Hess showed approximately $38,000 for its common.

GLASS TRADE OPTIMISTIC

While the week witnessed comparatively little increase in demand for window, plate and other flat glass products, the outlook is deemed favorable for an improvement in marketing trends with the advent of the second quarter, according to American Glass Review.

Clearly indicative of an improved sentiment in the flat glass trade was the meeting of Western jobbers this week in Chicago. While an over-abundance of optimism as to the near future was hardly to be expected in view of industrial conditions generally, it was the consensus of opinion that in April there will be an increase in demand for all kinds of flat glass products.

With the opening up of spring building operations all indications are for a rather substantial revival of activity in the window glass field. During the past month production of this commodity has been at an exceptionally low figure, with the March output expected to run less than 400,000 boxes. As a consequence the demand, even though light, is somewhat in excess of current production.

Shanghai Silver Stocks Drop Off

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Silver stocks in Shanghai on March 12 totaled 193,000,000 taels, of which 136,100,000 taels were held in native banks, says a radiogram to the Department of Commerce from its Shanghai office. The corresponding figures for March 5 were 192,300,000 taels and 140,000,000 taels, respectively.

Sycee and silver bars were valued at 90,300,000 taels on March 12, as compared with 91,000,000 taels on March 5. The actual number of silver dollar coins in Shanghai on March 12 was 142,000,000 as compared with 141,000,000 on March 5.

LOCAL TRADE SITUATION MIXED

Easter Season Approach Brings Improvement in Retail Trade Sales

While distribution at retail is showing a moderate improvement with the near approach of Easter, the business situation continues mixed, according to R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review. Jobbers of women's wearing apparel report demand considerably stronger, while men's wearing apparel, shoes and hats continue to move rather slowly.

While some retailers appear to be stockingup to some extent, others are buying very lightly, and retailers' stocks as a whole appear to be averaging materially lower than normal. Manufacturers of trunks, bags and suitcases report sales still slow, and the leather market continues very quiet. Seasonable lines of hardware are moving at a slightly higher rate and there is also more activity in the demand for furniture and carpets. Jobbers of groceries and provisions report a fair volume of business, but prices continue very low.

There is not a great deal of activity in building construction and demand for lumber and building materials is rather slow. Sanitary and heating equipment and plumbing supplies continue to move rather slowly, while a slight improvement is noted in demand for electrical equipment, although the rate of operation of manufacturers in that line continues materially lower than a year ago.

Production of crude oil again shows a sharp increase, and stocks of gasoline in storage are also higher. Production of bituminous coal shows a slight increase, but is still well below the rate prevailing a year ago and there is no improvement in demand.

There has been little or no improvement in the rate of collections, the average continuing slow.

IMPAIRED CARS SHOW GAIN

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Class I railroad on March 1 had 153,606 freight cars in need of repairs or 6.9 per cent of the number on line, according to the car service division of the American Railway Association. This was an increase of 2,146 cars above the number in need of repair on February 15, at which time there were 151,460 or 6.8 per cent.

Freight cars in need of heavy repairs on March 1 totaled 109,826 or 4.9 per cent, an increase of 2,966 compared with the number on February 15, while freight cars in need of light repairs totaled 43,780 or 2 per cent, a decrease of 320 compared with February 15.

ARE WE A DEBTOR NATION?

By JOHN H. VAN DEVENTER

Some old time construction camps used to work a "one-way" labor system. The company operated a store at which employes could buy what they needed, in addition to the company boarding house where they were fed. Distance from towns or villages made it impossible to shop elsewhere, and the prices charged made it improbable that the men would have anything left from the week's pay after the accounts were balanced. In fact, most of them got into debt to the company and therefore couldn't have quit and gone elsewhere if they had had elsewhere to go.

The National Prosperity League of Chicago says that we are getting into a similar condition with regard to our national and other indebtedness.

State, municipal, railroad and utility bonds now extant require the huge annual interest sum of two billion dollars. Most of these are long-term issues. In consequence, the total interest earned by them will be as much or more than the principal sum. Thus for every dollar put to work, we or our descendants will have to pay two dollars.

If to these interest bearing obligations we add the indebtedness from bank loans, mortgages, individual borrowings, debts of the federal government and all other interest bearing debts, "we will find," says the league, "that the interest charges are sufficient to consume the entire net earnings of the American people."

Some of our financiers are saying that the deferred payment plans whereby people buy automobiles, pianos and radios, etc., before they have earned the money to pay for them, is bad business, because it ties up future earnings. But at the most, they do not increase the principal sum more than from 7 to 10 per cent. How about these long-term obligations which double themselves in interest charges?

TRADE TREND UNCERTAIN

NEW YORK, March 28.—Domestic trade developments are still dubious. The delicate balance of business convalescence has been a bit disturbed this week by the rumbling of renewed political rumpuses here and abroad, says the Business Week in its report covering the week ending today.

The threatened revival of farm relief agitation by the Farm Board's abandonment of price pegging is politically pessimistic, but fundamentally favorable for business readjustment. The row over the German-Austrian effort to translate French rhetoric into reality, however, exposes again the volcano of political passion upon which European economic stability is precariously perched, and clinches the conviction that American business recovery must come from the cultivation of our own cabbage patch. Gov. Norman's visit here holds some hope of international action on a scale comprehensive enough to overcome the credit crisis which uncontrolled price deflation has precipitated.

The index, down slightly to 81 per cent of normal for the week ended March 21, shows no significant change in the stagnant statistical picture. In the preceding week, the index stood at 81.4, while in the same week last year the reading was 95.6 per cent.

Commence Work on Drug Store Survey

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Commencement of active work on the national drug store survey to be made by the United States Commerce Department in St. Louis, Mo., was announced today by William L. Cooper, director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Under the guidance of a group of trade specialists of the bureau the recording machinery was set in motion for what is expected to be one of the most comprehensive studies of retail merchandising ever undertaken in any field.

Cotton Industry Turns Optimistic

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Considerable optimism has been created in the cotton industry by the increased sales of cotton cloth and reduction in stocks, states the Bureau of Agricultural Economics in its report on world cotton prospects.

Sales of cotton cloth in February were at the highest weekly average since September, 1929, and the increase in shipments in January and February reduced stocks to the lowest level since November, 1927.

PENS COMBINE BEAUTY, UTILITY

The modern trend in fountain pens is toward a combination of the practical with the ornamental, according to J. Harry Miller, who has sold more than 1,000 pens in the last 10 years at McCloy's, where the largest fountain pen display in Western Pennsylvania is to be found.

The fountain pen has evolved from a large, black, clumsy writing implement with an intricate mechanism and perishable rubber ink tubes, to the smart types of interchangeable and convertible pens with taper and cap, for desk or pocket, in colors which harmonize with desk sets as well as tie or frock.

Greater ink-holding capacity, simplicity and efficiency of mechanism and a wide variety of color combinations mark the progress of the fountain pen.

Women are becoming mannish in the selection of their pens, Miller finds. More men's pens are now being sold today than women's. Women prefer clips to rings on the ends of their pens.

The demand for fountain pens is greater today than ever before, Miller believes, because the younger generation is growing up with the idea of using them in school. Quill pens are giving way in the boudoir desk sets to the colored fountain pen.

The first color innovation in fountain pens was red and green, because these were the only colors the materials came in. At present there is a growing popularity of mother-of-pearl and mottled effects.

STEEL DEMAND TO UNDERGO TEST

Theories as to the Future Trend Are Conflicting; Hopes for Gain Seen

By B. E. V. LUTY

A test is now to be undergone of a theory widely held in the steel trade, that demand would continue to increase after the usual peak date, which usually falls in March, though occasionally in April. In a very few weeks the course will be definitely known. Meanwhile, facts and theories are decidedly conflicting as to which way the swing will be from the present condition.

In less than three months, up to the middle of March, the rate of steel production increased fully 50 per cent over the low December average, and that is fully double the maximum seasonal swing ever seen, any larger increase being due to unusual conditions, not of seasonal character. One hesitates to form any opinion from the magnitude of this increase, whether it suggests unusual vitality or an excess of overreaching.

PRECEDENT STRONG

Turning to theory, the precedent of declining production into July is so strong that it would require a good bit to overcome it. In typical years of uniform general business conditions the decrease from the spring peak to the July rate has ranged from 15 to 25 per cent. The steel trade does not expect improvement in general business to help it above the present position before the latter part of the year. Its experience in recoveries from various depressions in the past, depressions of all sorts from mild to severe, is that recovery from depression, as such, occurs either in March or late in the year, not in January, April, May, etc. This is not making a prediction as to general business, merely stating how things have worked out in the past as to steel as an individual commodity.

EARLY PEAK DEMAND

There are special considerations, however, that encourage a hope at least that steel tonnage will continue to increase, though at a slow rate relative to the recent increase, during the next two or three months. In the first place, the false or too strong start early last year is very well remembered, and everyone has been expected to do exactly the opposite of what he did last year. That, apparently, would tend to throw the peak, if there is one, later in the year than usual, nor has there ever been adequate explanation of why peak demand in the past should come so early.

HEAVIER NEEDS LIKELY

In the second place, a survey of conditions in steel consuming lines suggests, in the main, heavier requirements in the near future than there have been to date. There is the automobile industry, expected to reach its heaviest production no earlier than in May, and quite possibly in June. In connection with automobile manufacture, steel is ordered, produced, shipped and fabricated with such celerity that much less time than formerly elapses between the steel mills feeling a turn and the turn actually occurring in automobile production. Then there are rails. Certain purchases were made for the season, and it is now said railroads have been slow ordering out the tonnage, which would suggest that rail production will not taper off to July 1 as it has done in the past. Next there is line pipe, which to date has called for little steel production, but orders in the last fortnight have been heavier and demand during the season can hardly help being better than it has been to date. Finally, no matter how poor general building may be this year, it will be better than it has been, for thus far wire, sheet and pipe makers report practically no business attributable to opening of the general building season.

Soviet Gas Sale In Africa Near

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Negotiations for the large scale marketing of Russian gasoline and oil in South Africa, with generous financial aid from the Soviet government, are on the verge of completion, according to current reports in South Africa, forwarded to the Department of Commerce by Assistant Trade Commissioner DuWayne G. Clark, Johannesburg.

ALLEGHENY COUNTY
"Public Improvements Promote Progress"

The Brandt School Road, located in Franklin Township, is a new section of improved road making an important connection between two existing improved roads, namely the Ingomar Road and the Bayne-Wexford Road. It extends one of the county's Radial Routes northwardly a distance of 2.63 miles. The pavement is of reinforced concrete nine inches thick at edges, seven inches thick at center and eighteen feet in width.

This contract was awarded to Donatelli & Donatelli on May 27, 1930. It was completed during November, 1930, the total construction cost being $167,545.11. The source of funds was the 1928 Peoples Bond Issue.

5-YEAR FIXED TRUST IS SET UP

Formed to Take Advantage Of Expected Recovery in Stock Market Values

A new fixed trust, primarily to take advantage of expected recovery in stock values, has been set up by the American Depositor Corporation. Issue is limited to 5,000 participations, each comprising 500 trust shares, present offering being confined to 2,000 full participations. The securities, to be known as 5-Year Fixed Trust Shares, are offered by dealers distributing Corporate Trust Shares; at current prices for underlying stocks, the trust shares would be quoted around $9.

In selecting the portfolio the list of available securities was reduced to 25. While most of them were selected with an eye to speculative possibility, it was recognized that the list should be ballasted with enough stocks of high investment rating to provide an adequate measure of security for the investment as a whole, without overly restricting the enhancement possibilities of the portfolio.

RETURN GOOD

Moreover, since all of the stocks selected are paying dividends, a satisfactory nominal return at the present time is provided. The units are composed of stocks in approximately equal capital amounts.

Life of the trust cannot be extended beyond December 31, 1935, and provision is made for earlier termination of the trust agreement in event that the market appreciation with the sponsors look for is realized sooner. The trust will be terminated and the entire group of stocks sold if and when their aggregate values double the March 1, 1931, basic values. Proceeds are then distributed pro rata. If the stock of an individual company trebles its March, 1931, basic value such stock must be sold and proceeds distributed.

NO SUBSTITUTION

Any stock which fails to pay dividends or make other distributions of value, for a stated period of time, must be sold and the proceeds distributed.

No substitutions may be made in the portfolio.

The holder of a full participation (500 shares) may at any time surrender the certificates to the trustees and receive in exchange the deposited stocks, with accumulated distributions. The holder of any fractional part of a participation may surrender his certificates and receive in cash a sum equal to the market value of the applicable participation of the deposited stocks, less a small service charge.

Classic music invaded Pitt more seriously than ever before at the annual concert of the Men's Glee Club in Carnegie Music Hall last night. There was a fine audience, and it might have been a little more generous with its applause for the good music there fellow students were singing.

Mr. Lissfelt

There seems to be a larger chorus than before with some outstanding voices too. But as with all choirs beginning a new regime in the choice of better music, this ensemble is still lacking in steady rhythms, in balance of voices, and in that sparkling tone and smart diction that can come only with maturity. In songs like Brahms' Sandman there were more surprisingly good effects which promise well for the chorus.

As soloist appeared Martha Eaton Brickman, a local soprano, who makes a very pleasing impression both by her modest stage presence, and by her good voice. Her choice of songs was excellent, though she could have conceded a point at this concert and found something more cheerful for this occasion.

Little Change Seen in Business Activity

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

THE FIRST QUARTER of 1931 is drawing to a close but little change in fundamental business conditions has taken place since December. While industrial production is at a higher rate than three months ago and has been slowly inching its way to higher levels, the fact that business always has a pause at the close of the year, followed by an almost immediate revival, must be taken into consideration.

While there have been few positive signs that business improvement is on the way, the drifting course of activity of the past three months may at least be taken as an indication that the slump has been checked.

There is less of the attitude of pessimism prevalent than during the final months of 1930. While few business leaders expect any sensational recovery this year, most of them are looking for a gradual revival before the close of 1931.

Steel Uncertain

THE STEEL INDUSTRY is quite representative of the condition of general business. With production between 55 and 60 per cent of capacity, few companies are operating on a satisfactory basis from the standpoint of profits. Increased demand for material from automobile companies has given some stimulation to steel output.

Steel, like other commodities, was sharply reduced in price during the depression. Attempts are being made to advance quotations but it is still uncertain just how successful the mills have been in establishing higher levels. It is generally believed that no very marked increases in steel prices will become effective until late in the year.

Earnings Off

AS NEAR AS CAN BE JUDGED from industrial activity, the statements of most companies for the first quarter of the year will be discouraging. In most cases they will show either no improvement or only moderate gains from the results of the final quarter of 1930 and, of course, they will be far below the first quarter of last year.

This is being reflected in the unfavorable action on dividends taken by directors of a large number of corporations recently. The action of the stock market during the past week cannot be considered to have been particularly unsatisfactory in view of the great amount of bad news on dividends.

Financing Good Sign

THE INCREASED VOLUME of new financing is a good business sign and reflects improved confidence in the immediate outlook. During a large part of 1930 the banks were keeping their funds in as liquid a state as possible, fearing that some institutions might get into difficulties. Now that the banking situation has been cleared up, a larger share of their funds can be put into investment securities. This has been a helpful factor in the market for high grade bond issues.

BANK DEPOSITS UP 14 PCT.

Deposits of 11 downtown banks show an increase of nearly 14 per cent over December 31, according to statements published today as a result of national and state bank calls. In addition to the gains in deposits, the banks show probably the strongest liquid condition in their history. Huge amounts of cash and government securities are available, the statements indicate.

The 11 banks from whose statements the figures were taken show deposits of approximately $849,000,000, compared with $746,300,000 on December 31—an increase of $102,700,000, or nearly 14 per cent. Cash holdings of these banks amounted to $155,100,000, compared with $125,200,000 three months ago—an increase of $29,900,000, or 24 per cent.

The extreme liquidity of the banks is indicated in their government bond holdings. These government bonds are considered equivalent to cash, and distinct from corporation or other bonds held as investments. Ten of these banks indicate government bond holdings amounting to $310,000,000, while nine of the banks showed a total of $230,700,000 on December 31. This is an increase of $79,400,000, or 34 per cent.

The combined cash and government bond accounts amounted to $465,200,000, compared with $355,900,000 in the earlier period, or an increase of nearly 31 per cent. The relation of cash and government bonds to total deposits on March 25 was nearly 55 per cent, compared with 47 per cent on December 31.

Two Men Arrested, Gun, Liquor Seized

Gust Lindheimer, 43, of 631 Suismon street, and Albert Stillwagon, 29, of 903 Constance street, were arrested in Lindheimer's rooming house this morning after occupants of the Suismon street house told police that Stillwagon was flourishing a revolver. Police arrested the pair and reported confiscating a quantity of moonshine and wine and an unloaded revolver.

Heart Attack Kills Aged Man on Visit

Collapsing in the home of a friend late last night, Samuel Hood, 73, of Marquis street, suffered a heart attack and died a short time later. Hood was visiting Louis Kircher, 1210 Irwin avenue, when he collapsed. He was removed to Presbyterian Hospital where he was pronounced dead.

Firemen Extinguish Downtown Blaze

Downtown firemen were called early today to extinguish a fire on the third floor of the Nixon Theater Building, William Penn way and Sixth avenue. The flames were confined to a switchbox in the third-floor hallway. Deputy Fire Chief Louis Conley estimated the damage at $200.

Real Estate

The Real Estate Company of Pittsburgh, represented by S. T. Christian and D. R. Sweeney, has consummated an exchange transaction between Oscar Larson and Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Wiley. Larson conveyed one of the Thames Manor apartment buildings, Negley and Ellsworth avenues, to Mrs. Wiley, who, in part payment, gave title to a three-story brick apartment of six suites at 5712 Forbes street. The Thames Manor apartment is a four-story brick and steel fireproof structure housing 21 separate apartments. The other property fronts 45 feet on Forbes street and extends back 200 feet. The total consideration, the brokers say, was $185,250.

The Autenreith Dollar Stores have leased from Charles E. Horner the store and basement at 1120 Seventh avenue, Beaver Falls. Following alterations, a store will be opened on the property. The Horner Real Estate Company, downtown brokers, negotiated the lease.

Thomas & McDonald, building contractors, have sold to B. B. Rogan a brick home of six rooms and tile bath at 238 Ridgewood avenue, West View. A. J. Urban purchased from the same contractors a six-room dwelling at 240 Ridgewood avenue. Thomas & McDonald sold another six-room brick home at 244 Ridgewood avenue. C. J. DeBar, Bellevue realtor, was the broker.

An all-day sales conference headed by Guy W. Ellis, former president of the Detroit Real Estate Board, was held yesterday in the William Penn Hotel under the direction of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board. In the morning from 10 to 12 o'clock Ellis discussed "The Dollars You Are Missing Down the Street" and "Some Commissions Paid by Property Briefs." During the afternoon Ellis chose for his subjects, "New Approaches to Business Men" and "How to Make Appreciative Prospects." He is holding sales conferences for realtors in the larger cities of the country as a service of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Philip Goodman, Squirrel Hill builder, has completed plans and made application for a building permit for the construction of two eight-room brick homes of English design in Bellerock place, Fourteenth Ward. The houses will have three-colored tile baths and contain the latest features of building construction. Theodore Eichholz is the architect. The homes will be built on lots measuring 45x125 feet each. Goodman expects to have them completed in July.

Applications for building permits follow:

Second Ward—Fairmont Creamery Company, remove tanks, 100 Twenty-fifth street, $1,000.

Tenth Ward—R. Scharf, brick extension and alterations, 4901 Broad street, $900.

Eleventh Ward—Board of Education, bleachers, Highland avenue and Black street, $8,000.

Twenty-sixth Ward—C. J. Lugibihl, concrete block garage, 427-29 Dunlap avenue, $2,000.

FULL CREW BILL OPPOSED HERE

The Chamber of Commerce has gone on record as being opposed to the re-enactment of the "Full Crew" law for railroads in Pennsylvania, proposed in two bills recently introduced into the Legislature, according to James Rae, president of the chamber. The action read:

"The employment of extra men by the railroads on freight and passenger trains will force upon them extra expense which ultimately will be passed on to the public through excessive rates."

Opposition was also voiced by the chamber to the passage of the amendment of the public utilities statutes, which provide that no change shall be made in any tariff or schedule until they have been approved by the Public Service Commission. The chamber declared that changes in freight rates and charges would be seriously delayed under such an amendment.

BANK OFFICIAL, WAR VET, DIES

Floyd E. He was made a director in October of that year, and January 21, 1930, was made secretary and treasurer. During the World War he was connected with the quartermaster's service. WORK ON PARK PROGRESSING STEADILY

Permanency Stressed by Organization Developing County Memorial Park

Permanency of construction has been the primary consideration in all the work done on the Allegheny County Memorial Park, R. B. Montgomery, president of the organization, declared in outlining the progress made toward the completion of the park plan. Mr. Montgomery said that every phase of the work has been designed in an effort to make the improvements lasting, not from the standpoint of a few years but from the standpoint of centuries.

In building the roads it would have been cheaper to install concrete curbs, but 10 miles of stone curb have been set so that there will be as little deterioration as possible.

BUILT LIKE PARK

Extreme care has been exercised in the landscaping work in order to obtain the most beautiful lawns possible. Before grading was started the top soil was removed from almost the entire tract. Hills were then leveled and valleys filled in. The result has been as near perfection in the contour of the land as possible. After this work was done the top soil was carefully prepared and mixed with substances necessary to produce the best type of lawn. The soil was then replaced over the entire park. Within a few months a large portion of Memorial Park will be under grass.

Every effort has been made, Mr. Montgomery pointed out, to avoid the appearance of the ordinary type of cemetery which is so lacking in beauty. No head stones, monuments or vaults will be permitted. The graves will be marked by bronze tablets set even with the surface of the ground. Instead of having the ghastly appearance of the ordinary cemetery cluttered with monuments in varying degrees of taste, the Allegheny Memorial Park will look, as its name implies, like a park.

PERPETUAL CARE

Perpetual care will be automatically provided for all the lots. A portion of the purchase price of each plot is being set aside in a fund placed with the Colonial Trust Company. The income from this fund will provide a permanent endowment to keep the park everlastingly beautiful. At present the trust fund amounts to $200,000. By the time sales work has been completed, the fund will reach $1,000,000.

Mr. Montgomery states that sales efforts up to the present time have been highly successful and that the business depression has had no appreciable effect on the interest of the general public in providing a suitable resting place for their loved ones.

Pittsburgh was incorporated as a Borough in 1794 with a population of less than 500 and an area of less than one-half square mile.

Today the city ranks fifth in population among Metropolitan Districts, with an area of only 51.37 square miles in the corporate limits as against 139 square miles in Detroit and 442 square miles in Los Angeles.

Allegheny County—the real Pittsburgh, has 122 independent municipalities besides Pittsburgh, with a total population of over 1,374,600.

No other city in the United States, except Boston, has as large a proportion of unannexed population as Pittsburgh. In recognition of this situation the voters of Pennsylvania have adopted an amendment to the state constitution to create a consolidated city of which all the existing 123 municipal governments shall become parts, thus making Pittsburgh a city of 1,400,000 population, outranking Detroit and Los Angeles and following Philadelphia.

HOTEL STUDIES LANGUAGES

CHICAGO.—(INS.)—That soup can be ordered in 17 languages and properly served is the boast of a leading hotel here.

Ice water is known to the dining room staff in nine different tongues, and coffee may be obtained even if demanded in Russian, German, Swiss or Arabic.

The bus boy, addressed in Croatian, French or Spanish, will politely replenish your butter.

Members of the staff will soon be able to speak 21 languages, according to Manager Bernard B. Wilson. He said:

"We are planning to increase our linguistic abilities in preparation for the coming World's Fair in Chicago. Inquiries about reservations have already started coming in from far-away lands, and we want every guest, regardless of his country, to feel perfectly at home while stopping with us."

LAUDS MEXICAN ANTIQUES

LINCOLN, Neb.—(INS.)—Mexico holds archeological treasures unrivaled anywhere on the globe, General I. Thord-Gray told members of the Lincoln Archeological Institute at a recent meeting here.

He said:

"It is very queer that here in America teachers and archeologists are so slow to realize the possibilities of these ruins. Right here in North America we have traces of human civilization which undoubtly surpassed the culture and learning of Rome long before that great city existed.

"There are ten times as many pyramids found in Mexico as in Egypt. The temble of the sun, in Mexico, is but 75 feet narrower than the largest of Egyptian pyramids, and the temple of the feathered snake, which has been discovered in Mexico, is the largest of known ancient temples, seating more than 200,000 people without crowding."

Chaperons Problem In Ohio University

COLUMBUS, O.—(INS.)—Checking up on chaperons at fraternity dances is a problem that is bothering Dwight Teegardin, chairman of the social committee of the Fraternity Presidents' Council at Ohio State University. He complains that sometimes chaperons never show up at dances, after accepting invitations. Others, who do come, pay little attention to the students, he says.

Planes Exempted From Tax on Gas

SANTA FE, N. M.—(INS.)—Airplane pilots will be exempt from the state tax of five cents a gallon on gasoline, under the provisions of a bill recently enacted by the state legislature. The tax is collected for road purposes. Proponents of the measure pointed out that states which imposed such a tax on airplanes had suffered loss of air traffic as a result.

Shad-Fishing Date Advanced 10 Days

MIDDLETOWN, Conn.—(INS.)—Connecticut river shad should be available soon after April 20, this year, the legislature having shifted the date of the shad fishing season from May 1. The season will close June 10, in the future, instead of June 20. Residents in the heart of the shad district believe the yield this year should be a record one.

New Air Line Opens In Western Service

DENVER.—(INS.)—A direct air service from Denver to Great Falls and Billings, Mont., was inaugurated recently with the opening of a connecting line from Billings to Casper, Wyo. Existing lines already connected Denver with Casper. Previously it was necessary to go by way of Salt Lake City, Utah, to enter Montana by regularly established air lines from Denver.

TRADE CHANGES MAY STEADY BUSINESS

Trend of Trade Into Laps Of Large Corporations Quickened by Depression

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, March 27.—Changes are quietly taking place among private corporations which may in time forge better industrial instruments for stabilizing the business cycle.

In recent years there has been a marked trend of business into the laps of the large dominant corporations. This movement has been accelerated during the depression. General Motors Corporation for example, thus far in 1931 has sold about 45 per cent of the output of the automobile industry, compared with about 34 per cent last year. Already forms have changed sufficiently within industry to create better means of control but these new engines of capital have not yet been manned by enough socially minded individuals with the skill to apply their power in the interest of the general economic situation.

Mr. Rukeyser.

NEW TYPE LEADERS

Men like Walter S. Gifford of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Clarence Woolley of the American Radiator Company, Lewis H. Brown of Johns-Manville, Owen D. Young of the General Electric Company and Henry Bruere of the Bowery Savings Bank, are new type leaders, who have grasped the larger social meaning of their purely business activities. As soon as a majority of the 2,000 directors of the 200 large key corporations are men of the type of these newer leaders, much progress will be made toward the rationalization of American industry.

In reporting the results of an elaborate statistical survey conducted under the auspices of the Columbia Social Science Research Council into the place of the large corporations in American economic life, Gardiner C. Means discloses that giant companies with assets in excess of $80,000,000 occupy an increasingly dominant position, indicating that this class controls 80 per cent of assets of corporations having stocks regularly traded on the New York Stock Exchange.

ASSETS DOUBLE

In 1927 the 200 largest non-financial corporations received more than 40 per cent of the corporate income, and controlled more than 35 per cent of all business wealth and between 15 and 25 per cent of national wealth. Between 1909 and 1927 the assets of these 200 largest corporations grew more than twice as fast as the assets of all other non-financial corporations.

The study also shows that the 200 leaders reinvested a larger proportion of their earnings, obtained a greater proportion of new capital in the open market, and also grew more through the process of consolidations. At this rate of growth, 80 per cent of non-financial corporate wealth would be in the hands of 200 corporations by 1950.

Apart from the social consequences of this trend, it would appear to be the part of prudence for the individual investor to put securities of the billion-dollar corporations in his portfolio of investments.

Butler Armed To Guard Guests

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal.—(INS.)—The combination guardian law and order and server of soup has made his appearance in a fashionable Beverly Hills household.

More than a score of guests were at dinner in the home of Homer Laughlin, banker, the other evening when one of the women guests, who was wearing a costly diamond necklace saw a heavy pistol in the hip pocket of the butler.

She tried to hide her jewels with her hands and her sudden alarm spread to other women guests.

Laughlin calmed the agitation.

"This is not a holdup. My butler used to be a soldier, and I had him arm himself tonight because of the wave of party banditry. And he will be armed from now on."

STRONG REPORT BY ALLIED CHEMICAL

Company Ploughed Back $4 a Share Into Nitrate Plant; Net Declined 17%

NEW YORK, March 28.—Although Allied Chemical and Dye Corporation's 1930 net profit is off some 17 per cent from that of the previous year, the report in other respects is strong. The company ploughed back into the Hopewell nitrate plant alone, out of earnings, the equivalent of about $4 a share on the 2,286,980 shares of common stock. Allied Chemical probably put into that venture alone some $16 a share in the last four years. That does not take into consideration large sums of money applied to reserves and other properties.

$9.77 ON COMMON

Allied Chemical and its subsidiaries for the year ended December 31, last, showed a net income of $25,103,539 after depreciation, taxes, etc., equivalent after 7 per cent preferred dividends to $9.77 a share on 2,286,980 no-par shares of common stock. That compares with $30,198,523, or $12.60 a share on 2,178,109 shares, in 1929. The increase in common shares resulted from the 5 per cent stock dividend. Two such dividends have been declared, one in December, 1929, and the second last December. It is understood that the stock dividend policy will be continued and that the rate probably will not go below 5 per cent in any year.

SAVINGS EFFECTED

The basic character of the company's business made for curtailment during 1930. Important economies were put into effect during the year, which should enable the company to respond even more rapidly to any business upturn.

The company has maintained a conservative dividend policy, paying $6 in cash dividends on the common shares. The rate was raised from $4 some years ago. A 5 per cent stock dividend was declared in 1929.

More Important Stock Leadership Needed For Market

Observers point out that market leadership has been confined to speculative issues. Steel common, which is a favorite with the public, has not been doing much. That stock is watched closely, and if it could assume a more important position in the rallies, the influence on outsiders would be considerable. Many firms report that in the past when Steel common has been among the outstanding leaders, they have received more business on the buying side from their customers.

American Tobacco issues have not made any noteworthy response to the record-breaking annual report, showing earnings of $43,345,000, and the prediction that 1931 will prove to be another record year. Estimates for the first quarter of the current year place earnings considerably in excess of those for corresponding quarter of 1930.

February operating statements of the railroads have been shaping up about as had been indicated by the trend of freight car loadings in the period. A compilation of the reports of the first 40-odd roads to report for the month shows net operating income averaged 45 per cent smaller than in February, last year. Among the larger roads reporting, Atchison showed gross of $13,186,000 against $17,183,000 in February, last year, and net operating income of $1,120,000 against $1,990,000. And Baltimore and Ohio, one of the biggest of the eastern carriers to report during the day, showed its February gross was $12,409,618 against $16,005,373 last year, with net operating income of $601,815 against $1,789,210 in February of 1930.

The head of one brokerage house advised his clients as follows: "Liquidation is over. The people, that is 99 per cent of them, seem interested in the upside only. Stocks go down at times when pressure is brought to bear on certain issues. But they don't stay down, for the very reason that liquidation fails to make its appearance. Under such conditions, there is bound to be an advance when the shorts start to cover."

The current epidemic of dividend slashing is not surprising to those who were able to keep their feet on the ground when boom earnings and an unprecedented bull market were making for abnormally high rates of corporation disbursements. If the truth be known much of the boost in dividend rates in that interval was made against the better judgment of various corporation managements, and under pressure of demand from stockholders for greater liberality. Going back over the records of a vast majority of the companies whose dividends have been cut or omitted thus far this year, it can be seen pretty clearly that such dividend payments as were in force before adjustment could only have been maintained with "boom" earnings such as prevailed in the first nine months of 1929. Thus while the process is painful it is none-the-less healthy.

This week's Federal Reserve statements reveal further substantial contraction in earning assets of the system and the local institution, and consequent strengthening of the Reserve position in both instances. The total of Federal Reserve credit in use throughout the country contracted by $49,000,000 and is now $167,000,000 smaller than at this time a year ago. This reduction is due primarily to shrinkage in holding of open market bills, which were cut by some $39,000,000, and by a drop of $10,000,000 in holdings of government securities. The total of Reserve notes in circulation remained about the same, but another interesting disclosure was the drop of some $16,000,000 in holdings of bills held on a contingent liability basis for foreign account.

SLAYER KILLED IN COURT HOUSE

PINEVILLE, Ky., March 28.—(AP.)—In a blaze of gunfire that wounded four spectators, Walter Parsons was shot to death in the Bell County Court House here, as an aftermath of his slaying his cousin in preventing a holdup last Saturday night.

Hubert and O'Dell Collett, brothers of Creed Collett, whom Parsons shot to death and their brother-in-law, James Black Howard, were arrested charged with the shooting and rushed to the Middlesboro jail to prevent the possibility of Parsons' friends seeking vengeance on them. Parsons claimed Creed Collett was one of the masked men who attempted to hold up and rob his gasoline station at Blackmont.

The shooting occurred in the corridor just before the examining trial was to have been called. Spectators and witnesses scurried to safety, but four were wounded.

BLIND CHILDREN EXHIBIT DRILLS

Pupils of the Western Pennsylvania School for the Blind guided almost entirely by sense of touch and directions of their instructors, last night gave their annual demonstration of physical education in the Porterfield Memorial Gymnasium. Approximately 100 children took part. They represented all departments of the institution, from kindergarten to high school.

Apparatus, tumbling, calisthenics, social and folk dances and games made up the program. An exhibition of swimming and diving followed.

About two-thirds of the children are totally blind, and although they are on an average two years behind the normal child in scholarship attainment, it is the belief of the instructors that, due to their remarkable memories, they retain more of what they learn than the average child.

Instructors in charge of the demonstration were Marie H. Cobb and Fred A. Hunt.

Amazing Plane Won't Go in Nose Dive

PUEBLO, Colo.—(INS.)—An airplane that rises straight up into the air, has no wings, goes 50 miles on a gallon of gasoline, will sell for $500 and will attain a speed of 100 miles per hour has been perfected in a Pueblo workshop, according to Wilbur Nelson, the inventor.

Nelson claims that his machine cannot take a nose dive, but will settle gently to the earth in case of motor trouble.

MAN LOSES DRY PAROLE, JAILED

A two-year parole granted Thomas Janton, 42, of Braddock avenue, Braddock, May 26, 1930, when he pleaded guilty of violating the prohibition law, was revoked by Judge R. M. Gibson and Janton was sentenced to serve three months in jail and pay a $500 fine.

He was charged with violating his parole by having a quantity of whisky and wine in his home when it was raided March 3 by prohibition agents and police.

On May 15, 1926, he was fined $500, and January 20, 1927, $100. The probation sentence was imposed May 26, 1930, the court being lenient because of his wife and children.

BARNARD'S DEATH BLOW TO BASEBALL

A STUNNED AND soddened baseball world, staggered by the realization of a heavy loss and shocked by the suddenness of its happening, today was mourning the death of Ernest S. Barnard, president of the American League. In the abrupt termination of his brilliantly successful career as the chief executive of the junior major organization, the national sport has lost one of the biggest figures and best loved characters of any era in its history, a progressive and uplifting influence and a builder of public confidence in the organized game whose passing is a blow to every league from the largest to the smallest.

E. S. Barnard

Though Pittsburgh is in a circuit apart from that of which President Barnard was the able head, his character as a man and his ability as a leader were as fully appreciated and as highly respected here as in any city of his own league. He came to Pittsburgh a number of times for schedule meetings, or in other matters affecting both big leagues, and each succeeding visit strengthened the impression of local baseball men that he was one of the real pillars of the sport.

THE SORROW CAUSED everywhere in baseball by the passing of President Barnard was deepened by the shockingly sudden nature of his death. Until a few days ago he had been making a tour of the American League training camps in the South, and almost daily he discussed his policies for the future and in particular for the season of 1931, to which he was looking forward with his usual keen interest and never-failing optimism.

For several weeks Barnard's predecessor as president of the American League, Ban Johnson, has been critically ill in a St. Louis hospital, and there is said to be no hope for his recovery. His death was expected almost hourly at the time when Barnard went South apparently in perfect health. These two were the only men ever to hold the office of president of the younger league, though Frank J. Navin, owner of the Detroit club and vice president of the circuit, served in that capacity during Johnson's illness in the latter part of the season of 1927.

BARNARD WAS ONE of the most capable and progressive executives ever connected with any club or league in baseball. He was for a long time secretary of the Cleveland club, was president of that club from 1922 to 1927, succeeding the late James C. Dunn, and was elected president of the American League on November 2, 1927.

During his more than three years as league chief he did much for the best interests of baseball. What he did for his own league was helpful to all other leagues, and baseball as a whole suffers a great loss in his passing.

DEATH HAS LAID a heavy hand on the executive side of the major baseball leagues during the last four months. Barnard is the third prominent official in the majors to be taken since December. In that month William F. Baker, president of the Philadelphia National League club, died suddenly in Canada while attending the annual convention of the minor leagues, and on February 22 Samuel W. Dreyfuss, vice president and treasurer of the Pittsburgh club, died at his home here. And Ban Johnson, it is said, cannot recover.

FOLLOWING HIS VICTORY over Kid Francis in New York last night, by a decision in 10 rounds, Fidel La Barba is likely to go right on to the world featherweight championship if Battling Battalino can be prevailed upon to defend his title. La Barba looks to be easily the best man in the class since Kid Chocolate slumped.

Should Fidel fail to reach the heights, his manager, George Blake, believes he has a future champion in another featherweight, Martin Zuniga, a Mexican. Zuniga appears on nearly all of the cards that feature La Barba. He has covered more ground than any other preliminary boxer in history, having made the trip across the continent several times.

George Blake

BLAKE IS BRINGING Zuniga along with extreme care. George is not a manager of the dollar-grabbing type that takes in tow as many boxers as are available just for the money that can be made out of them. He will take only a fighter in whom he can see a possible future champion, and then he watches him carefully.

Blake has only two glovemen under his management, La Barba and Zuniga. As William Wood remarks, he differs from Ray Alvis, who is said to have an interest in 83 battles, and from the late Leo P. Flynn, who used to boast that 18 of his boxers had been knocked out the same night in different parts of the country.

CAN SCOTT HIGH overcome in basketball a handicap similar to that which proved so disastrous to the Yellow Jackets in the hockey playoffs when they lost Gordon Fraser? The North Braddock lads will have a tough contract on hand tonight, lacking the services of Buck Tomko and forced to rearrange their lineup for the tilt with Hollidaysburg High in the race for the interscholastic floor championship of the state. But they're a game little bunch, and if they lose in their crippled state it will not be without a determined fight to the last ditch.

IF A TRACE of doubt lingered in any quarter as to Tommy Loughran's right to some consideration as a contender in the heavyweight championship argument, it must have been dispelled by his latest achievement in winning the decision over Tuffy Griffiths in their 10-round debate in Chicago last night.

An opponent must be constructed of something pretty close to championship stuff to beat Griffiths, and in turning that trick as his eighth straight win Loughran proved he is ready for a crack at the front row. He may not be able to beat Jack Sharkey in a return match, but he is entitled to the chance.

Doc Knowles

RECENTLY DAN O'LEARY, famous old heel-and-toe walker, boasted that it costs him only 40 to 50 cents a day for food. He explained that since the extraction of the last of his teeth he had turned vegeterian and was living most frugally.

This brings Doc Knowles, trainer of the New York National League Baseball Club, to the front with the assertion that O'Leary doesn't know anything about keeping down the cost of sustenance.

KNOWLES, WHO IS always preaching simple living and sane dieting, says O'Leary's economy is nothing to what he has done, the Doc, according to his own statement, having lived on 10 cents a day for food for a month at a stretch. He relates that while he was a Y. M. C. A. instructor at Lynchburg, Va., he made a bet that he could live 30 days on only $3 for grub. He won the bet, he says, and did not lose a pound in weight, though all he ate was whole wheat and bran muffins. He adds that once in his earlier days, when he and his brother were returning from a summer's work as harvest hands, they were accidentally locked in a box car for six days with nothing at all to eat.

BUFFALO, March 28.—The Buffalo Bisons, who gained a one-third interest in the International Hockey League championship series lead by handing the Pittsburgh Yellow Jackets a 2-1 setback at Pitsburgh Thursday night, will attempt to strengthen their position as title favorites when they conclude their playoff jousting with the Steel City skaters at the locals' Fort Erie, Ont., rink tonight.

Tonight's game will mark the inaugurating of the title competition here. The Bisons were to have been hosts to the Windsor Bulldogs in the series opener here last Tuesday, but the ice-freezing apparatus at the Fort Erie rink failed to function on that night, and the game had to be postponed until April 7.

CLOSE GAME LIKELY

Although they rule slight favorites to bag another decision, Buffalo's warriors anticipate a close, hard fight in their final meeting with the Jackets. The Schooley stalwarts finished with colors flying when they had to finish their regular schedule with a victory sweep in order to get into the playoffs. Today they are in a similar position, in that the two defeats which they sustained in their first two title series games have left them in a spot where another setback is almost certain to mean their elimination as championship contenders.

Pittsburgh, furthermore, has enjoyed greater success against Buffalo here than it has at home. The Jackets held the Bisons to deadlocks in their last two appearances in Fort Erie, and the series fray in Pittsburgh Tuesday shaped up as another tie until a Pittsburgh penalty gave the locals a chance to gain the lead in the second period.

JACKETS DETERMINED

When the Jackets arrived here today Charles Reid, their coach, said that they were in fair shape for a real battle, and the grim visages of the players indicated that they would not give up their last title hopes without a bitter struggle.

Bill Farren, sports reporter for Pittsburgh Radio Station KDKA, accompanied the Jackets here. He is to telephone his opinions of the battle to Pittsburgh for a broadcast through KDKA at 11 o'clock tonight.

Windsor, tied with the Bisons for the series lead with one victory and no defeats, plays in Cleveland tonight against the Indians, defending champions. Cleveland has lost one and won one game, and Cleveland and Pittsburgh victories tonight will leave the series well muddled.

TOMORROW: THE WHISKERS THAT CAUSED A WAR.

BAN JOHNSON, BARNARD DIE

T. Brush, who headed the Indianapolis club. He outwitted Brush.

In 1901 Johnson expanded the Western into the American League, mainly through the financial assistance of Charles Somers, of Cleveland. It was called a "flighty" scheme at the time, but a few years saw the American dominate the field.

Johnson obtained valuable aid from Charles A. Comiskey in his efforts to build up the league. Comiskey now heads the Chicago White Sox. Together they formed a combination of practical and executive skill that forced the National League to sue for peace in 1903. The result was the national agreement, a document under which baseball was administered until the advent of the present commissioner, Kenesaw Mountain Landis.

RULED WITH IRON HAND

When Johnson finally resigned as president-treasurer of the American League October 17, 1927, and his league elected E. S. Barnard his successor, resolutions paying tribute to his success were adopted by seven club owners. The Chicago White Sox did not vote, due to a feud between Ban and Comiskey.

In his administrative affairs Johnson ruled with an iron hand. He gave no quarter and asked none. He demanded and obtained respect for his umpires, whom he considered authorized representatives of the league.

He brooked no disorders on the playing field, and he fought constantly to keep baseball honest and players upright. With league funds he was careful to the point of penuriousness, but he threw his own money about in a lavish manner.

Frequently his clubs would fall into financial straits, but Johnson always was able to produce a new backer.

In late years Johnson suffered from a foot infection, aggravated by Bright's disease. His health declined. When the old order of baseball government changed from the national commission to a commissioner he became dissatisfied.

LOSES BRAVE FIGHT

Hostile forces kept crowding until their efforts, combined with bad health, brought his resignation as head of the American League. Johnson went into retirement, endeavoring to regain his health.

He became seriously ill several months ago in St. Louis. Physicians amputated a toe in an effort to stem the foot infection. That failing to bring back his strength, a blood transfusion was resorted to, but the baseball czar failed to rally. His dominant will was all that kept a spark of life within him during the last weeks, in which he remained conscious only part of the time.

Emilio Scala, London baker, $1,772,720—will return to Isola, Italy, to spend his remaining days.

C. C. Woods, Buffalo, N. Y., factory mechanic, $886,360—will take his family to Europe.

George Dyamond, Capetown, South Africa, public house keeper, $500,000—will take a round-the-world trip and maybe do a little gambling.

Wind Aids Glass Equal Dash Record

AUSTIN, Tex., March 28.—(AP.)—Peyton Glass, Jr., of the Oklahoma A. & M. College, tied the world record of 9 5-10 seconds in the 100-yard dash preliminaries of the Texas relays yesterday. Glass, however, had a stiff breeze at his back.

GRIFFITHS BOWS TO LOUGHRAN

CHICAGO, March 28.—(AP.)—Tommy Loughran, the master of boxing from Philadelphia, is still at large on his ambitious raid through the ranks of the heavyweights, and his latest victim is tough Gerald Ambrose Griffiths, of Sioux City, Ia.

Loughran, with 11 years of campaigning behind him, last night gave the youthful Griffiths a boxing lesson in 10 rounds, in the feature event of the Chicago Stadium's second anniversary show, to add the Iowan to a list of seven straight conquests, which included Max Baer, Ernie Schaaf, Dick Daniels and King Levinsky. The task was a little more difficult than usual, however, for the weaving, bobbing Griffiths offered a poor target during the first four rounds, and the decision was not unanimous. The judges cast their votes for the former light-heavyweight champion, while Referee Dave Barry called it a draw.

The customers, of whom there were 13,124 who paid, leaving $36,155 at the gates, were satisfied with the decision, and ringside observers believed that Loughran had built up a substantial margin.

Griffiths never was in danger and kept piling in, even in the closing rounds when Loughran's ringcraft made him look rather awkward. Griffiths had a slight weight advantage, scaling 187 pounds to 183.

LA BARBA BEATS FRANCIS

NEW YORK, March 28.—(AP.)—Fidel La Barba, Los Angeles veteran, has evened his score with Kid Francis, of Italy, and is steaming ahead at full speed toward a "shot" at the world featherweight championship.

The one-time flyweight champion of the world fought a well-planned, cagely battle to whip Francis decisively in a 10-round bout in Madison Square Garden last night, though the 7,800 cash customers didn't like it.

La Barba popped a jarring left into the Kid's features in annoying fashinon all evening, pounded him a bit as they came to close quarters and then tied him up firmly or held on when Francis attempted to get in a few socks at the body. The crowd hooted, but the verdict of the referee and two judges was unanimous.

The Associated Press score card gave La Barba six rounds and Francis two, with two even. La Barba scaled 125 pounds; Francis 122½.

Ens, Pirates Regret Death Of Barnard

Staff Correspondent.

LOS ANGELES, March 28.—Manager Jewel Ens and other members of the Pirate family today expressed regret and surprise over the sudden death of Ernest S. Barnard, president of the American League.

Barnard was highly regarded throughout the National League and the officials of the Pittsburgh club were among those who looked upon him as an efficient, as well as a sportsmanlike executive.

MISS VAN WIE WINS CROWN

SOUTHERN PINES, N. C., March 28.—(AP.)—Virginia Van Wie, caught in the hardest downpour of a rain that descended on the final 18 holes of the Mid-South women's 36-hole medal tournament, overcame the elements yesterday to win the championship. She shot an 84, one over women's par, for a final total of 157.

Her score was seven strokes better than the next best in field of 80 contenders. Edith Quier, of Reading, Pa., could offer. Miss Quier had 164.

The long and grueling battle for the state scholastic basketball championship, which really begins with the opening of the W. P. I. A. L. campaign, ploughs into its semi-final stages tonight, a game being listed for the Stadium here and another in Philadelphia.

John Phillips

In the local tussle, Scott High, the hotsy-totsy entry from North Braddock, which has nailed down the W. P. I. A. L. title and defeated two P. I. A. A. district foes in Westinghouse and Farrell, tackles Hollidaysburg, of District V. Hollidaysburg got into the semi-final round by virtue of a triumph over Windber, of Section VI. The school drew a bye in the second round.

Down East, away down East if you must, Williamsport and Lower Merion go to the mat. Lower Merion was runnerup in the state title last year, and has come along right nicely again this season.

SCOTT STAR LOST

Scott must engage Hollidaysburg tonight minus the services of its captain, Buck Tomko, who became 20 years of age yesterday and therefore was automatically declared ineligible. The loss of the brilliant forward may be more serious than is generally figured, for the team is worn and tired after its 26-game race, and the dropping of such an important cog as Tomko certainly does not figure to improve matters.

Phillips, who turned in some very much o. k. performances as a first string reservist while Tomko was still in the going, will draw the starting assignment at the forward, paired with the clever Ralph Ferguson. Vic Bache will be at center, of course, and Kuno and the peppery Johnny Krutullis, all-tournament choice, at the guards.

Hollidaysburg boasts a strong defensive team, as big as Scott physically, and is rated as a first class contender.

PITT, RANKIN BOXERS DRAW

University of Pittsburgh freshmen broke even with Rankin High School in their dual boxing match at Rankin last night. J. Schreicker, of Pitt, scored a technical knockout over Joe Bovanich, of Rankin, in the second round. The summary:

115-pound class—George Patterson, Pitt, and Ralph Rocco, Rankin, fought a three-round draw.

125-pound class—L. Lebowitz, Rankin, defeated P. Bradle, Pitt, in three rounds.

135-pound class—M. Santicola, Pitt, defeated James Porto, Rankin, in three rounds. Joe Sabino, Rankin, defeated R. Mazer, Pitt, in three rounds.

BAXTER GIRLS WIN

The girls volley ball team of Baxter Junior High defeated Peabody, 59 to 19, yesterday.

Says Nick Altrock

(Baseball's Comedian)

BILOXI, Miss., March 28.—Folks, pass me the aromatic spirits—I'm going to swoon. I just read the Chattanooga club, of the Southern League, signed up a 17-year-old girl as pitcher. It won't be long now before we're sipping ice cream sodas on the bench and there's a full-length mirror in the dugout.

Nick Altrock

Can you imagine the Chattanooga manager criticizing her curves without getting his face scratched? And if an umpire ever plasters on a $25 fine, she'll never pay until it's marked down to $19.75.

Boys, if this is what baseball has come to, your Uncle Nick is going out and buy himself a powder puff. Is my nose shiny?

LOS ANGELES, March 28.—His other slab aces having failed, Manager Ens of the Pirates today put the matter of stopping the Tigers up to Larry French, erstwhile holdout southpaw. Larry is keen to heckle the Jungaleers, and if he feels well, he will travel at least seven innings in the third game of the series.

Ens was pretty well disgusted with his athletes this morning on top of two defeats at the hands of the Bengals. He took his men to task before the battle of yesterday, and then he had to watch the Freebooters lose an extra-inning clash to the Detroit boys. The Pirates rushed to a deadlock in the ninth, but the Buccos folded in the tenth and the American Leaguers took the verdict in the tenth by scoring twice. The score was 10 to 8.

TIGERS HOLD EDGE

Games with the Tigers are scheduled for this afternoon and tomorrow. The Pirates turned back Bucky Harris in a single contest staged in the new Seals Stadium at San Francisco, but the Detroit outfit now holds the edge in the series.

The Tigers are not ferocious to gaze upon. They are a reminder of the Reds or Phillies, but they are fighting, and when nine players fight together, anything can happen. On paper, the Pirates have a big margin on their interleague rivals, but games are not won on the form sheets.

French, therefore, will be a determined pitcher as he flips against the representatives of the Automobile City. Larry is likely to be opposed by Righthander Tom Bridges, a kid with a fine fast ball.

The Tigers hopped on to Remy Kremer yesterday and, while the Buccos treated Earl Whitehill rather roughly, they could not offset the ineffective quality of their own ace's pitching. Heine Meine and Andy Bednar finished up for the Freebooters.

P. WANER TO REST

Paul Waner has received orders to rest his sore leg, and it is feared he will be bothered for some time by the wound that was placed on his left ankle by an unidentified ocean prowler in the waters of Florida. Paul has been working out every day. The sting of the unknown creature left an infection deep in the flesh, and while it responded to treatment a complete cure has not been effected, and now a boil has appeared at the wound. This evidently is due to the poison which has not been entirely eradicated. The afflicted ankle was considerably swollen after Paul's exertion yesterday.

CLAN DOUGLAS, CRAFTON MEET

The semi-final round of the Nied Cup will open this afternoon at the Westinghouse High School Stadium. Clan Douglas, winners of the District Soccer League, will tangle with Crafton Heights. Inasmuch as the Heights bumped the Rovers out of the tourney last Saturday, there is reason to feel the Clansmen are in for a tough afternoon.

Two soccer games will be played tomorrow and these will bring Dunlevy and Morgan together in the Keystone League and Bower Hill and Bridgemont together at Bridgemont. The first game will be played at Husher Field, Monessen, with the kickoff scheduled for 3 o'clock. The game today will start at the same time.

The Bridgemont game is a benefit affair for Pete Cherry, out of action with a broken leg.

CLAIM DATTO 'INDIAN SIGNS' RODGERS

By HARRY KECK
Sports Editor.

Does Johnny Datto, Cleveland Filipino featherweight puncher, have the "Indian sign" (if a Filipino can have an Indian sign) on Jackie Rodgers, local Negro socker, whom he meets a third time in the 10-round main bout in the Motor Square Garden ring next Monday night?

There are some fans who say he does and can beat Jackie any night in the week and twice on Sundays, and others who are just as insistent that he doesn't and can't. Those who see in Datto a jinx for Rodgers claim that Jackie himself recognizes the spell Datto wields over him and that this fact has accounted for the defection of Rodgers several times when matched with the Clevelander. In other words, and putting it bluntly, they claim the evasions of the issue by Rodgers have been plain, every-day runouts. Countering, the Rodgers adherents want to know why Datto pulled out on Rodgers the first time they were matched, claiming illness.

BOTH DANGEROUS

As a general rule, a boxer who has beaten another twice handrunning figures to do it almost any time, but, in the case of Rodgers and Datto, both are good punchers and each has had the other on the floor several times in a bout, and, with fellows like that pitted against each other, almost anything can, and does, happen. That's why there is a question whether the Indian sign theory holds good in this rivalry. In their first bout, it was Rodgers who finished in better style, after having been down four times in the second round, while, in the second, Datto, after being dropped three times in the first four rounds, came on to outlast Rodgers and breeze in with his second victory.

Maybe Rodgers does have a healthy respect for the punching ability of Datto, but, if so, Datto also has tasted the Rodgers wallop and knows it is safe to toy with only when taken lightly.

JACKIE ON SPOT

It must be generally admitted that Rodgers is more or less on the spot in Monday's clash. If Datto beats him again, opinion ought to be more or less unanimous that Datto is the better man, for three times straight constitutes a majority in almost any league. On the other fist, if Rodgers should happen to turn the tables, he'll still be one down to Datto in their series and keen to even up things, and—well, it looks as if the boys will fight it out along that line, if it takes all summer.

Sometimes a series such as this one becomes a habit. And habits, unless they are good ones, should be religiously avoided.

Between Rounds

Ted Yarosz turned in his fortieth consecutive victory when he knocked out Eddie Kauffman, of Cleveland, in the sixth round of their bout at Canton, O., a few nights ago and is tentatively matched to box Larry Madge, of Cleveland, at Oil City, Wednesday night of next week.

Ed Fritz, of New Castle, has completed his card for next Monday night's show in his Castle Bowl arena. He has Joe Sekyra, victor over Benny Touchstone at Motor Square Garden last Monday night, against Gene Stanton, of Cleveland, in his 10-round windup, and Fritz Otto, German war veteran, against Pat Smih, of Akron, in the six-round semi-final. Tommy Arnold boxes Al Shiek, Al Graver meets Jackie Ward and Merle Gibson engages Homer Gray in four-round preliminaries.

Jess Pursell, of Piqua, O., wants to show Lee Creager, featherweight, and Johnny (Kid) Gilmore, welterweight, in local rings.

TECH AT MORGANTOWN

Carnegie Tech's varsity rifle team today is in Morgantown, W. Va., where it will engage in shoulder-to-shoulder competition in the national intercollegiate championships. Other shoulder-to-shoulder matches in the same event will be held simultaneously at Annapolis, San Francisco and Lincoln, Neb.

BIRTHDAY PARTY FOR TOM NOONAN

The Loudspeaker

—By LOUIS REID—

NEW YORK, March 28.—Thoughts at random. Of all the maestros herded in the broadcasting corral Leopold Stokowski seems to have the keenest sense of publicity. He now asserts the day is not far off when he will be presenting grand opera by television.

Stokowski brought new prestige to radio when he offered a part of the first American performance of "Wozzeck" to the microphones, even though the excerpts were incomprehensible to the ears. He must have been aware of its radio failure, for he issued his television statement soon after he laid down the baton.

* * *

The numeral 5 no longer has its former potency for the radio magnificoes when they assume their role of soothsayers. For years they said television was "five years away." Already they have lopped four years off their prophecy.

When television comes to the parlor it will make an Army-Notre Dame game one of the most thrilling of all spectacles to behold. Then listeners can see, without the necessity of a depression in the wallet, a raccoon coat, an automobile rug, a flask and the discomfort of traffic congestion just what magic it is that Dr. Rockne instills into his young athletes. They can see the beautiful precision of the cadets on parade. They can watch the spine-chilling battle and hear at the same time the mass excitement of the stands as well as the individual excitement of the noun-and-verb men.

* * *

Radio manufacturers are experimenting with television receivers. They are saying nothing about it. They are saying a good deal, however, about midget sets. The midget set is revolutionizing the radio industry. Its compactness appeals to the little woman-in-the-home. It is already beginning to occupy the space formerly assigned to the goldfish bowl and the Christmas vase of artificial flowers.

* * *

The most difficult task of the musical broadcasters is arranging a tawdry ballad to make it sound like the work of a master. . . .Were a search conducted for that radio program sponsor who has delved deepest into his bankroll since the advent of broadcasting it would end at the threshold of A. Atwater Kent. . .Of all the songs of the somber Nineties, those of Paul Dresser reach the microphones least . . . Schubert's "Ave Maria" played as a violin solo, can almost always be depended upon to break a rapt attention in a bridge game or a detective story.

Brief variety programs are now interrupting the so-called Slumber Hour and protests are pouring in to the broadcasters. . .Spies report the Slumber Hour has little popularity outside sophisticated New York. There's no one so sentimental as a sentimental sophisticate . . . Orchestras now on the air represent every race but the Mongolian. The Mongolian has yet to learn jazz . . . The busiest broadcaster in the Hooverian sun is Dr. Julius Klein, assistant secretary of commerce. . . . Klein, 'tis said, declined the offer to be secretary to the President, succeeding George Akerson. . . . The radio, fortunately, is fairly free of animal and bird imitators.

* * *

Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture" has reached the jazz laboratories. We continue to hear of tenors who began life as cowboys. It would be bigger and better news to know that cowboys had begun life as tenors . . . Russian bassos appear to have the deepest bassos in the world . . . Were a vote to be taken of the favorite bathroom melody of the last 20 years, it is my conviction that first place would be overwhelmingly reserved for "On the Road to Mandalay" . . . Of all descriptive music that agitates the air Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Flight of the Bumblee Bee" is for me the most accurate in living up to its title . . . I consider Rudolf Friml's "The Song of the Vagabonds" the best marching chorus written in the last 10 years . . . The most charmingly suggestive song I recall ever having heard—it has never been given on the air—was "Marie Odile," by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, which Ina Claire sang in a dim and distant "Follies."

WE NOW PRESENT

By DARRELL V. MARTIN, Radio Editor.

Ted Lewis' drawl "Is everybody happy?" projects a real personality on the radio and we prophesy that before many weeks this 7:30 feature on WCAE will be much talked about. Ted has a talented band whose tempo, while fast and rhythmic, is still not to be classed with jazz outfits. "Wabash Blues" is on his schedule tonight. Weber and Fields discuss the Empire Building and "Prohibition." WCAE at 8. Weber says the Empire Building was erected to get beyond the 12-mile limit. We recommend again the Ben Alley-Ann Leaf concert, WJAS at 8:15. And you will like Alicia Fuller, organist, on KQV at 8:30, we're sure. Big Bill Farren is to write a report on the Yellow Jacket-Buffalo Bison hockey game at New York for KDKA listeners at 11 p. m.

Someone whispers that there's plenty to create interest in the Ping Pong championships. WCAE at 11:15. We're from Missouri!

Tom Noonan (God bless him!) attains his fifty-seventh birthday today. If you want to show your appreciation of his marvelous work drop a telegram or letter to the Rescue Mission, 5-7 Doyers street, "In the Heart of Chinatown, New York." WMCA (570 kilocycles) runs a birthday party at 11:30 tonight.

Our prayers and best wishes go winging!

QUESTION A DAY:
My set logs stations by kilocycles and frequently I see a program scheduled by wavelength. Will you print a full list of stations both by wavelength and kilocycle so that I will have no trouble dialing them?—Edna W., Canonsburg.

Answer—Here's a mathematical formula that should be in your scrap book. To convert kilocycles into wavelength divide the number of kilocycles into 300,000. To convert wavelength into kilocycles divide the wavelength into 300,000. The quotient is what you want.

DO YOU KNOW—

That Milton Tully, Pittsburgh boy, is one of the 16 Salon Singers (WCAE at 7)?

That Ann Pickard (six) does "Old Black Joe" as a specialty for WJZ listeners at 7:45?

That Alois Havrilla, singing in a Bridgeport, Conn., church fell in love with one of the parishioners—Miss Marion Munson—and married her later that day?

That Louis L. Kaufman is m. c. for a special benefit performance for unemployed tonight at 8 o'clock in Syria Mosque? Other radio celebrities on the bill are "20 Fingers of Sweetness," KDKA Players, Dick Powell, Bernie Armstrong, Jean Barry and the Troubadour Sextet.

That Charles Lyons (WTAM) and Charles B. Tramont (NBC) have voices so nearly alike that they are often mistaken by expert listeners?

That George Dilworth, NBC conductor, is married to Gitla Erstinn?

That Don Ball, the announcer, never wears a hat?

That the Memorial Park program introduces an all-string woodwind ensemble tomorrow at 1:30, KDKA?

That Jo Tyler's Band (WJAS Sunday at 6:30) is composed entirely of war veterans?

TELL IT TO SALLY

By SALLY MARTIN

Courts Mother, Daughter At Same Time

This is the story of a Gigolo—Mamma's overstuffed pocketbook—and Thurley.

Our hero (Ramond's his name) insists Thurley's his Little Queen so long as Mamma's not around. But the minute Mamma and her money—come on the scene, Little Queen finds herself in the discard. In spite of which, believe it or not, she has swallowed his line, hook, bait and sinker!

Favors Her Mother

Like your programs hot off the griddle? Then tune in.

"Dear Friend Sally:—

"In keeping up regularly with your column, I have acquainted myself with the fact that you have the ability to solve troublesome problems for poor misguided humans.

"Sally, I want you to please give me a break, and not keep me in suspense long about this affair I am going to tell you about. It may seem trivial to you, but it's everything in life to me.

"My mother fell heir to a lovely home and a pretty nice bankroll recently and as she is so very attractive, she has many men of all ages, dancing attendance upon her. My poor father died, years ago.

"One admirer of hers — a handsome brute (but with no money to back him up) years younger than mother—professed to love her passionately. Ramond (that's his name) and I adore him. And he says that he adores me. Here's what gets me:

"When mother isn't around, he tells me he can't live without me, and all the old regulation gags. (I have given up all my companions for him, by the way.) But he pays no attention to me when mother's on the scene. That breaks my heart, Sally!

A Cave Man

"Last evening I had the opportunity to talk with him for a moment when mother was dressing. He kept telling me, over and over, that he loved me. And when I acted overjoyed, thinking I was victorious, and mentioned announcing our engagement to mother—he fell into a violent rage . . . (he seemed so repulsive to me then, but I guess I wasn't myself because I do love him just the same, if not more).

"He told me he'd kill me if I mentioned his adoring me to mother. Think how wonderfully 'cave-mannish' he is!

"Anyway, whenever he embraces mother, he winks at me! So I just know it is me he loves.

"I love him with every breath in my body, but I don't dare tell mother. If I did, she'd be sure to park me in some corner again. (Whenever any of her admirers show me the least bit of consideration she throws a fit.)

"Please, please help me! Do you realize you're all I've got to guide me—to tell me what I should do? I'm just desperate, I'm afraid I'm losing my reason.

"THURLEY."

"P. S.—From my letter, don't you think Ramond is simply glorious?"

Don't I think Ramond is "simply glorious?"

Kid, if I told you what I think Ramond is it would take a couple of ambulances, the shotgun squad, the board of health and the whole fire department to clear the room. Then I'd spend at least six months more outlining what I think of mamma.

As for you, Honey—you're just a poor, little sprat who has much to learn or you'd never be falling for this big mushroom's maneuvers.

Cares Only for Himself

A big Brave Cave Man? Don't make me laugh! He's just a lazy, contemptible, cowardly, vicious sneak. He doesn't care for you. He doesn't care for Mama. He doesn't care a hoot for anything or anyone on earth, but Ramond. And he's hanging around for what he can get. And nothing else but.

"But I love him!" you cry.

No you don't love him, youngster. You're just excited about him. And curious—and flattered—and fussed. That condition, at your age, is as inevitable as the measles—and as fleeting. It is part of the newness of the world . . . part of your own newness.

There's nothing unusual or abnormal or shameful about it. It was bound to happen. It's a part of growing up. But it won't last. And it hasn't the slightest relationship to love.

You're not any more in love with him than he is with you. Want to prove it? Just go and tell Mama about his fond words and watch your Handsome Hero go right up in smoke.

Give him the air, youngster. And then get out—have some regular fun with regular people. Hike and swim and dance and flirt and dream and work—and pray God to lead you safely to the Real Love that is waiting for you somewhere.

And here's someone who will be praying with you, Little Sister.

'IN THE SPRING'

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

In the spring "a young man's fancy," that famous Fancy, runs away with him. He indulges in a long-anguished-for top-coat that he feared to buy at any other season, sheds his heavy, sad, grey winter coloring, and steps out, either a smart blue guardsman, or a canary polo-fan. His heart is high, and his eyes rotate toward pretty girls!

Often he's in LOVE—if not with just a girl, with all of life; in love with the feeling of walking down the avenue or the country road, with his fun, his job, his folks, his hobby, and the new year tearing itself from the violent arms of March. The sky looks mighty promising in the spring! The heart throws off the load of the past year, and capers in its first youth again. Lambs gambol; and so does the young man's spirit.

If it's a girl he's in love with—IN LOVE—he writes poetry, even as George Washington did. He runs mad in flower-shops, and strikes the pale little flower-man speechless. He remembers that violets are for thoughts—so of course he must have those. He remembers that she loves rose-pink, with corals and pale-blue velvet ribbon—and so he shuts his eyes and orders a tremendous basket of pink roses. But it's spring. And the spring-flowers are enough to goggle one's eyes out. What but spring-flowers, so lacey, so frothy, so delicate, so infantine, so rainbow-hued, so fragile, should a man send the girl he loves in the SPRING? So he'll also have those. Some for color, some for sentiment, some for their darling beauty, he buys; and all—for her!

Spring. Oh, lovely time of marbles, and "jacks," and Love, and a bloom on the whole world.

When you are very young—you know, fresh as a daisy—new as fresh milk, and as unwise as the young calf that drinks it, all seasons look pretty much alike. But when you are a little older, and then a little older than THAT, spring begins to grow precious.

—NELL BRINKLEY.

CORRECT MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

A Ridiculous Rule.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have had an argument with a friend over a rule in etiquette. When a guest by accident breaks a dish while at the table, is it not proper form for the hostess to do the same? I have never met a person who has disagreed with me but this person, who tells me that it is an insane rule and she has never in her travels heard of such a thing.

I have known of this rule since I was a child, as my mother is a very good authority on etiquette as she went to the finest young ladies' school in Europe. MRS. J.

I agree with your friend that this is a fairly ridiculous rule. To begin with, if the hostess breaks a plate, just after the guest has broken one, naturally the guest will know that it was because he has broken one . . . This makes him . . . at least it would make me . . . doubly embarrassed, for then he would be responsible for the breaking of two plates. No one could be so dumb as to be consoled by the fact that fate made the hostess break a plate just after he had broken one.

I have seen hostesses spill soup after a guest has done this, or do repetitions of small things like this . . . but I have never seen a hostess break a plate after a guest has done this. I hope that I never will. For I should be embarrassed as the guest, I think . . . and thoroughly intrigued as to how she had done it!

The very best thing to do when a guest does an awkward thing, an embarrassing thing, is for the hostess to pay as little attention as possible to it, make as light as possible of it, and let the incident pass without comment . . . or breakage.

The Non-Fork-Shifting Method.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My brother and I have been having an argument on table etiquette. Will you please help us settle this question? While eating from the dinner plate, do you eat with the fork in your right hand? I have been under the impression (by seeing well-bred people) that you use the fork in the left hand and place the food on the back of the fork with the knife, which is in the right hand. I understand this latter method is used among the best of people, and society in general. Which is correct?

ELINORE.

Either method of eating is correct . . . it simply depends on which we prefer. It is certainly true, however, that the non-fork-shifting method of eating is gaining in popularity in this country. It has, as you know, always been used pretty generally everywhere except in this country, and now, because of travel probably and observation as to the non-fussiness of the non-fork-shifting method, the so-called continental manner of eating is being more and more used here.

Sincere Congratulations.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A friend of mine has sent me an announcement concerning the opening of his practice in medicine. I would like to know what is correct to do in such a case in regard to sending him a message of congratulation. Are there cards for this purpose, and is it good form to send one? M. S.

There are cards for this sort of thing, but please don't use them. They have the ready-made-sentiment flavor which doesn't taste good to the recipient. The most gracious thing for you to do is to write a note of congratulation; then your own words will carry the right message of sincerity. Or send a telegram of congratulation on the day of the opening of the office.

Love's Reawakening

Continuation of Love's Awakening

By ADELE GARRISON

Dicky's Delight in Spoiling Orchids Is of Short Duration

I caught back a surprised gasp at Philip Veritzen's comment upon my missing orchids. The crassness was so unlike him that I could only conclude his poise had been disturbed by something unusual. Dicky covered my surprise with a quick answer to Mr. Veritzen's little speech.

"You must blame my awkwardness—or perhaps my impetuosity"—he shot a provocative side glance at me—"for the loss of Mrs. Graham's orchids. I am afraid that in that last dance I forgot—or rather remembered"—his lips quirked into a grin—"that she was my wife and hugged her so tightly that the orchids broke and scattered. I was desolated when it happened, for I never have seen anything so exquisite as those white orchids against her green gown. I think I shall have to paint you that way, Madge."

His eyes half closed, as if he were visualizing the painting, and I choked back a laugh with difficulty. For I knew that if the biggest commission ever given depended upon it Dicky would never paint me with white orchids at my shoulder, reminiscent of Mr. Veritzen's gift.

But Dicky seemed determined to gild the lily. With the air of one seeking information, he turned back to my employer.

"D'ye mind telling me where you got them?" he asked. "I'd want to be sure of getting as good ones for a canvas. When Madge showed them to me tonight I exclaimed at their perfection. She had the beginning of an idea that she ought to be a patient Griselda wife and wear a bouquet I had sent her, not knowing that you were sending flowers to all the feminine guests and the hostess. But I soon disabused her mind of that idea. It would have been a crime not to wear them, but it is a worse crime to have spoiled them. If there were any possible way I could replace them, but at this hour—" He spread his hands expressively.

With difficulty I preserved a "poker face" through this speech. I hoped the recording angel was busy listening to some other section of the world while Dicky was blandly saying that he had sent a bouquet to me, "not knowing" that Mr Veritzen had already sent flowers. But my heart thrilled at his ingenuity. He had "put over" the fact that I had worn the orchids only at his insistence, but had so coated the pill with sugar that my employer could find no possible excuse for open resentment, even if his pride had permitted him to show any.

Mr Veritzen was silent for a long second, and from under my discreetly lowered eyelashes I watched his face. There was no expression save that of the courteous attention given by one gentleman to another's remarks. But when at last he spoke there was around his lips the wraith of a humorously cynical smile.

"Fortunately, I am always prepared for emergencies," he said, and held up a suddenly peremptory finger to Purnell, who was replacing the used cups at the fruit punch table with fresh ones. The little darky skimmed across the floor to us and stood at attention.

"Bring that box I gave you into the back room," he ordered, and Purnell gave the effect of saluting as he hurried away.

"Will you accompany me?" Mr. Veritzen said formally, and, walking between my husband and my employer, I went into the back room, where we saw that Mr. Seibel had rearranged the dinner table, making it a buffet. The food, of course, was not all in place, for the supper was not to be served until after midnight, but everything else was ready, and while we were waiting for Purnell we stood admiring the centerpiece of a miniature pool and bordering orchids.

"Those tiny goldfish are the world's best bet," Dicky said, touching one of them with the tip of his finger and laughing as the little thing flipped an absurd tail and dove to the bottom of the pool. There was distinct respect and admiration in the gaze I sent him. I knew that his real feelings toward Mr. Veritzen could not be uttered without profanity, but his manner was that of a respectful, appreciative younger man toward an older one of distinction who had complimented his family.

But when Purnell brought back an immense box and Mr. Veritzen opened it, disclosing orchids of every hue used in the corsages of the dancers I saw Dicky's eyebrows narrow for an instant, and knew that the naive delight he had taken in smashing my bouquet of white orchids was spoiled by the patent intention of Mr. Veritzen to replace them.

A Littered Kitchen

After you have made all the preparations for the dinner, wash up every pot, pan and utensil you have used and put them away. Then you have an excellent start beforehand, and the dishes from the dinner itself will not seem so irksome; besides the joy of an orderly kitchen and plenty of space for serving.

THE BEAUTY BOX

By HELEN FOLLETT

Thinning out the long bob requires skill. Tresses must not be clipped straight off, leaving stubby terminals; they should be tapered gradually. Clever cutters know how to do it.

Women with thin, sleek, fine hair who find that their glory-mops take too tight a permanent can have a semi-permanent, that is a half-time heating which will give body to the hair so that it will take the marcel—not only take it, but hang on to it for the period that elapses between shampoos. Or, instead of the marcel the hair can be finger waved, in wide becoming undulations, and the ends ringleted.

A sun-dried skin surface, or one that is wind-burned, needs less soap and water and more cold cream. It will lap up any oily emolient eagerly and gratefully. Let the massage be light, with upward, outward pressure—no downward movements to sag the tissues. Use a cream before applying make-up and when removing makeup. Cold water, early in the morning, helps the skin to function normally.

Wigs of satin, of gold tissue, of colored floss, even of feathers are worn by dashing French women when they attend the opera or the grand party. In our country, these lovely head pieces appear only on the stage, which is a pity, as they are wonderfully becoming and chic. They fulfill another mission; they stimulate the circulation of the stand-patters who shudder at anything that doesn't conform to the old institutions.

Followers of the Goddess Hygeia can grow their own lip rouge; they have no need of the lipstick at all. Lips of vivid coloring are the reward obtained by cultivating a respect for the laws of health. You get 'em by never failing to take the daily bath with the cold shower as a finish, by eating a diet that is properly balanced, by getting outdoor exercise every day, washing out the lungs with fresh air, and by clipping off nine hours of sleep every night.

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Disease Symptoms Should Be Accepted as Warning.

Albuminuria, or albumin in the urine, is not really a disease. It is a symptom or sign of certain changes in the kidney.

Dr. Copeland

Most insurance companies reject applicants presenting this picture. They insist upon repeated examinations until the urine has cleared up. Then they accept the applicant.

Much alarm and concern are experienced in the meantime. We immediately picture ourselves in the grip of some terrible disease and flounder about hopelessly. Stories of Bright's disease and other terrifying ailments come to our ears. We are almost sick from fear.

Well do I recall the story of a young man I had recommended for entrance at West Point. This boy was the very picture of perfect health. Not a symptom of any disease or incapacity had he ever experienced. He passed all his entrance examinations, including the physical examination, with high honors.

However, when it came to the usual routine urine examination, a trace of albumin was found. He was rejected on the ground of physical unfitness. This boy suffered all the tortures of disease itself because of worry.

I do not mean to say that the presence of albumin in the urine is to be considered lightly and ignored. Albumin is, usually, though not always, indicative of some disease. This disease is usually located in the kidneys.

However, we frequently encounter cases where there is absolutely no evidence of any disease in the kidneys. Further repeated tests of the urine show the absence of albumin.

Again, we run across cases where the albumin appears in the urine at certain definite stated times. This type of trouble is described as "cyclic albuminuria." In certain individuals who maintained an upright position more or less constantly, the urine showed traces of albumin. It is of interest that when these individuals were put to bed, or the occupation was changed, the albumin disappeared. Some individuals who eat a high protein diet, particularly one consisting of many eggs, will invariably show presence of albumin in the urine. With change in diet, the albumin disappears.

It is a condition frequently seen in prospective mothers and is then indicative of changes in the kidney. It is for this reason that the obstetrician insists upon so many examinations.

Albumin frequently appears during certain infectious diseases. This is the case in pneumonia and tonsilitis.

What I would like to impress upon you is that albumin does not mean kidney disease in every instance. However, it does warrant a complete physical examination by the doctor. He must check on your heart, kidneys, lungs and general circulation. If these are all found to be satisfactory we need not worry about the presence of albumin.

There are many individuals who have albumin in their urine all their lives. These people have lived to a good old age without any trace at any time of kidney disease or associated bodily defects.

I am telling you these things to reassure you. But please do not be too complacent about it. Be sure to see your doctor and let him examine you thoroughly to make sure all is as it should be.

Oh, These Women

By LEOLA ALLARD

Should a woman who would be unhappy "keeping house and pretending to love home life" stay at home and let the single girls have the jobs as suggested by Miss Seattle? A woman from Chicago protests and puts the question. She contends that women have the right to live their own lives as they want to live them.

They have. But would the men they married have been quite so anxious to marry them, had they known that they would be "anything but happy PRETENDING to love home life?" Why does a woman who dislikes home life marry? She can't be fond of children because children and home life go together. And speaking of pretending, did the woman pretend she liked home life and children until after the wedding?

Of course, Mrs. Chicago, if there are no children, a couple doesn't want any, neither of them care for home life and both want to work—that's that. But you speak of "a woman's ambitions being stifled by becoming a wife." Then why did she become one? Don't you think that to be a good wife is a laudable ambition? The ambition to have a home well cared for and happy for the husband and family (if any) to come to, and a place where you are happier than any place in the world, a place that looks like heaven to you after a visit in any other spot, the ambition to be everything in the world to a little group all your own! What do you mean "stifling ambition?"

The married women who write me on this subject say "take the employers' point of view" and then proceed to pan the unmarried workers who "make up too much and too often" and are man crazy. The married women stop making up and thinking about men because they got theirs. The single girls have the right to get one too. And some of them make good wives and don't feel that they are "stifling ambition" by being good home makers.

I'd love to hear what your husband has to say about your stifled ambition and about his home. Won't you have him write me? I'd like to hear from a man who really LOVES to have his wife going 50-50 with him in the business world; turning her home over to someone else to care for and coming home when he does, in business clothes, with a swagger and a pay check. I wonder if he ever looks a bit wistfully at the woman next door who meets her husband on the porch with a kiss and pridefully serves him something she made that tempts his appetite? She doesn't necessarily have to go without a maid, but I know a woman with four maids who makes things to please her family, like angel food cakes and delicate puddings. "Personal service" she calls it.

Can't you see one woman sitting in a big chair after dinner being a pal, and reading the stock news, and talking cold, hard business, and another with a dainty wishy-washy blue chiffon gown, all feminine and lovely, chit-chatting about everything that's happened in her very different day? And, men readers, which do you like best?

You don't find the women who love to make a home happy and proudly proclaim that their greatest ambition, waddling into divorce courts. Not one in 10,000.

Household Hints

Don't put greasy spoon on the side of the stove. Put a saucer there to hold it.

When aluminum ware becomes black and dull looking clean it with a soft cloth dipped in lemon juice; then rinse it in warm water; this makes blackened pan bottoms like new.

It is very difficult for the housewife who has to exercise care to keep down the food allowance to provide proper food for her family. The "greens" and fresh vegetables are so expensive while starches are very reasonable. The best plan is to cut down on the meats, substituting rice, macaroni, etc., and with these have the greens. They are much more beneficial than so much meat and not so expensive.

A large flat surface is important in accurately cutting out patterns, and in the confined quarters of apartments and homes today many a home dressmaker is handicapped by the lack of such area. An excellent substitute for a cutting table is provided by taking a large square of oilcloth and placing it over the bed. The scissors will slide over this surface with precision and there is little danger of their penetrating the oilcloth. Besides, it is easy to remove threads and ravelings from oilcloth.

WANT TO LOOK YOUNG?

The secret of keeping young is to feel young—to do this you must watch your liver and bowels—there's no need of having a sallow complexion—dark rings under your eyes—pimples—a bilious look in your face—dull eyes with no sparkle. Your doctor will tell you ninety per cent of all sickness comes from inactive bowels and liver.

Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, perfected a vegetable compound as a substitute for calomel to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are gentle in their action yet always effective. They help bring about that natural buoyancy which all should enjoy by toning up the liver and clearing the system of impurities.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are known by their olive color. 15c, 30c, 60c.

Pershing Tells Of Rivalry Over Sedan Capture

CHAPTER LXXVI.

Our success had been so striking since the beginning of the November 1st attack that I felt full advantage should be taken of the possibility of destroying the armies on our front and seizing the region upon which Germany largely depended for her supply of iron and coal. In accordance with these views the following order was issued to the 1st and 2d Armies:

"1. The energetic action of the 1st Army should completely expel the enemy from the region between the Meuse and the Bar within the next few days. The results obtained by this army have been felt on the entire front from the Moselle to Holland.

"It is desired that, in carrying out the directions that are outlined herein, corps and division commanders push troops forward wherever resistance is broken, without regard for fixed objectives and without fear for their flanks. Special attention will be given to impress upon all officers and soldiers that energy, boldness and open warfare methods are demanded by the present situation.

"The 1st and 2d Armies will Gen. Pershing at once prepare to undertake operations with the ultimate purpose of destroying the enemy's organization and driving him beyond the existing frontier in the region of Briey and Longwy."

Between the Meuse and Chiers rivers, north and northeast of Stenay, there was a very strong position which commanded the crossings in that vicinity. I believed that if we should cross the river south of Stenay and move in the direction of Montmedy we could turn this position and have an excellent opportunity to capture large numbers of German troops driven back of the line Sedan-Montmedy. By this maneuver we would also be in an advantageous position to advance on the important supply areas of Longwy and Briey.

Menace Eliminated

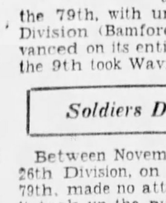
An attack by the 3d Corps to the east across the Meuse, south of Dun-sur-Meuse, in conjunction with the northward movement by the French 17th Corps, was prepared as a preliminary to a new line of advance to the east.

November 3, 4 and 5 the 5th Division of the 3d Corps in a brilliant maneuver on a wide front effected crossings of the Meuse and established bridgeheads south of Dun-sur-Meuse.

The heights of the Meuse were gradually cleared by the 3d Corps and the French 2d Colonial Corps, which had relieved the French 17th Corps. Now for the first time since 1914 the French positions around Verdun were completely free from the menace of these heights.

In these operations, the 5th Division, assisted by a regiment of the 32d, on November 5 had captured Milly and established its line from there south to the Bois de Chatillon. By night of the 9th it had advanced to Remoiville and north of Mouzay.

Our front was also extended to the south, and by November 10 an excellent line of departure was secured for an offensive in the direction of Montmedy. The 79th Division (Kuhn), in the French 2nd Colonial Corps, met decided opposition in its attacks of the 4th, 5th and 6th against the Borne de Cornouiller, and this strong point was finally taken on the 7th. On the following day the 79th, with units of the 26th Division (Bamford) attached, advanced on its entire front, and on the 9th took Wavrille.



Gen. Kuhn

Soldiers Drag Guns

Between November 3 and 7 the 26th Division, on the right of the 79th, made no attack. On the 8th it took up the pursuit of the retiring enemy, and by night of the 9th occupied a line which included Ville-devant-Chaumont.

The 81st Division (Bailey) entered the line as the right division of the French 2d Colonial Corps November 7, relieving the 35th Division (Traub). Attacking on the 9th against stiff defense, it captured Manheulles and Moranville.

In these last days of the fighting some of our troops, including the 81st, operated with a great shortage of animals, which made it impossible to employ all their artillery in close support of the infantry, and often required the men to drag their guns by hand.

The 6th Division (Gordon), which unfortunately did not get into battle, pulled a large part of its transportation many miles by hand in attempting to reach the rapidly moving battlefront south of Sedan, where it was planned to use this division in case of necessity.

Taking up again the account of our great drive northward, the 89th Division, 5th Corps, overcoming stubborn opposition, captured Beaufort on the 4th and reached the Meuse. The Foret de Jaulny was cleaned up the following day, and Cesse was occupied. The 2d Division in its attack on the 4th suffered heavy losses and made slight headway, but during the next two days it continued rapidly, and by night of the 6th reached the Meuse south of Villemontry.

80th Pursues Enemy

In the 1st Corps, the 80th Division on the 4th, in spite of the enemy's stand, captured Vaux-en-Dieulet and Sommauthe. The enemy retired during the night and the division took up the pursuit, overcoming vigorous rear guard resistance until reaching a line north and west of Beaumont. During the night of the 5th its progress continued, the division being relieved the next morning.

The 77th Division was effectively opposed on the 4th north and east of Oches, but on the 5th its line was pushed forward to the north of Stonne and La Besace. By night of the 6th the 77th had reached the Meuse, Remilly and Villers being entered by its patrols.

The 78th Division on the 4th captured Les Petites Armoises, and on the following morning advanced more than a mile to the north. The 42d Division relieved the 78th on this line, and by the 6th established itself north of Bulson.

November 6 the 1st Division, 5th Corps, took over the front of the 80th Division, 1st Corps, and at once made a rapid advance to Yoncq, reaching the general line of the Meuse in the vicinity of Villemontry.

It was the ambition of the 1st Army, and mine, that our troops should capture Sedan, which the French had lost in a decisive battle in 1870. I suggested to Gen. Maistre that the prescribed boundary line between our 1st and the French 4th Army might be ignored in case we should outrun the French, to which he offered no objection, but, on the contrary, warmly approved.

To reach the objective the left boundry of the 1st Army would have to be ignored, as Sedan lay to the northwest beyond that limit. The afternoon of November 5, the 1st Corps was directed to bend its energies to capture Sedan, "assisted on its right by the 5th Corps."

Orders Misunderstood

A misconception in the 5th Corps of the exact intent of my orders resulted in the 1st Division erroneously going beyond the left boundary of the 5th Corps and marching directly across the sector of the 1st Corps during the late afternoon of the 6th and throughout the night. The troops of the 1st Division carried out this unnecessary forced march in fine spirit, despite their tired condition.

Considerable confusion resulted in the 42d and 77th Divisions, and their advance was delayed as roads became blocked by the columns of the 1st Division. The 42d and the 1st then began a race for the honor of capturing Sedan. Part of these divisions had entered the zone of the French Fourth Army and were waging a fight with the enemy for the possession of the heights south and west of Sedan.

The morning of November 7 found men of the 42d and the 1st Divisions on the heights overlooking the city. Under normal conditions the action of the officer or officers responsible for this movement of the 1st Division directly across the sectors of two other divisions would not have been overlooked, but the splendid record of that unit and the approach of the end of hostilities suggested leniency.

The enemy's main line of communications was now within range of the machine guns of the First Army, which had driven him 24 miles since November 1. His position on the Western Front was no longer tenable and he urged immediate consideration of an armistice.

Between November 1 and 7 the western boundary of the 1st Army was changed several times by Marshal Foch, and the notification in more than one instance reached army headquarters too late to be transmitted to the troops in time to become effective.

November 7 the left of our army was limited by Mouzon, the original boundary not having been definitely fixed as far north as Sedan. However, this change was not effected until after the armistice, as the French 4th Army was not prepared before that time to take over that sector.

Americans Push Ahead

Late on November 9, Marshal Foch, then in conference with German representatives regarding the terms of the armistice, sent telegraphic instructions to all Allied commanders-in-chief from which it might be inferred that he was uncertain regarding the outcome of negotiations and wished to let the enemy know that there could be no further delay. The following was the message received:

"The enemy, disorganized by our repeated attacks, retreats along the entire front.

"It is important to co-ordinate and expedite our movements.

"I appeal to the energy and the initiative of the commanders-in-chief and of their armies to make decisive the results obtained."

Orders in response to this appeal were immediately issued and the execution by the 1st Army was under way November 10 and 11. Yet here again no sort of urging was necessary. Our troops were determined not to give the enemy any respite.

Col. Allen

Already the crossing of the Meuse had been planned for the whole army, and the 5th Corps got over during the night of the 10th-11th. Part of the 89th Division crossed on rafts just west of Pouilly, and others in the rear of the 90th Division (Allen). The 2d Division was unable to force a crossing at Mouzon, as planned, but about a mile south of Villemontry the engineers of the division, with exceptional rapidity and skill threw two bridges across, over which one regiment passed. The 77th Division, now on the left of the 5th Corps, only sent over patrols on the 10th and 11th, the low ground north of the river opposite its front being flooded by heavy rains and damming operations by the Germans.

Plan General Attack

The 1st Corps from November 6 to 10 was withdrawing its divisions to points on the Meuse between Dun-sur-Meuse and Verdun, preparatory to a general attack which would have as its object the turning of the enemy's strong position in front of the 5th Corps.

East of the Meuse the 1st Army advanced in conjunction with the 2d Army, which had been earnestly preparing for this moment ever since its organization.

The 2d Army, from left to right, was composed of the French 17th Corps, with the 33d Division (Bell) in line, and the 35th (Traub) in reserve; the 4th Corps (Muir), with the 28th Division (Hay) and the 7th (Wittenmyer) in line, and the 4th (Hersey) in reserve; and the 6th Corps (Menoher), with the 92d (colored) Division (Ballou) in line; and the 88th Division (Weigel) in the Army reserve.

Under the instructions issued by me November 5 for the advance of the 1st and 2d armies, which received approval of Marshal Foch in a personal note of November 8, the 2d Army made advances along its entire front in the direction of the Briey Iron Basin during the last three days of hostilities. In view of the stubborn resistance encountered, and the extended fronts held by its divisions, the gains realized reflected credit on that command.

Attacking on the 10th, the 33rd Division reached the Bois d'Harville and captured Marcheville, but was forced to retire. The 28th Division occupied a part of the Bois des Haudronvilles Bas, as well as Marimbois Farm. The 7th Division took and held against counterattack Hill 323. The 92nd Division captured the Bois Frehaut.

Meet Strong Resistance

On the front of the 1st Army, the 90th Division, on the left of the 3rd Corps (Hines), had crossed the Meuse on the 9th and attacked on the 10th, meeting decided opposition throughout the day. Elements of the division entered Stenay, but were unable to clean up the town, while others, after hard fighting in the nearby wood, reached but could not take Baalon.

The 5th Division (Ely) captured Jametz and cleared the Forest de Woevre. The 32nd Division (Haan) re-entered the line on the 9th, as the right division of the 3rd Corps, and made substantial progress. On the 10th the division moved forward until stopped by heavy fire from east of the Thinte River.

In the French 2d Colonial Corps the 79th Division (Kuhn) engaged the enemy on the 10th and captured Chaumont-devant-Damvillers, while the 26th Division (Bamford) took ville-devant-Chaumont. The 81st Division (Bailey) continued its attack on the 9th, cleaning up the remainder of the Bois de Moranville and taking Abaucourt. After hard fighting Grimaucourt was captured, but was later evacuated, the line being established west of the town.

Meanwhile other of our divisions were engaged on distant fronts. In Flanders, our 37th and 91st divisions, which had been sent to the French 6th Army at Marshal Foch's request, entered the battle October 31. The Cruyshautem Ridge was taken by the 37th Division (Farnsworth) on the first day, while the 91st (Johnston), advancing against intense fire, seized the strongly defended wooded area in its front.

Both divisions moved forward rapidly to the Escaut River on the following day in pursuit of the enemy. Despite resistance, crossings of the river were effected by the 37th November 2 and 3, the division being relieved the following day. Audenarde was occupied by the 91st Division on the 2d, and the division was relieved on the 3d by the French.

Advance Despite Losses

Both divisions re-entered the line for the general attack of the French 6th Army November 10. The 37th Division was directed to relieve two French divisions east of the Escaut the morning of the 10th, but these divisions had been unable to cross, and were relieved on the west bank.

Despite severe losses the 37th succeeded in again crossing the river and moved forward the following day, advancing two and a half miles eastward. The 91st Division met slight opposition on the 10th and none on the morning of the 11th, reaching a line east of Boucle-Saint-Blaise.

In the 1st Army the 5th Corps advanced rapidly the morning of the eleventh. Elements of the 89th Division occupied Stenay and established a line on the hill to the north. Pouillysur-Meuse was mopped up early in the morning and Autreville was occupied. The 2d Division advanced to the ridge west of Moulins; while the 77th Division held its line of the 10th.

In the 3rd Corps, the morning of the 11th, the 90th Division entered Baalon, and the 5th and 32d Divisions were preparing to attack. The 79th Division of the French 2nd Colonial Corps attacked against the Cote de Romagne and advanced a short distance, the 26th Division made slight gains, and the 81st Division again took Grimaucourt.

On the front of the 2d Army the attack of the 33d Division on the 11th was held up. The 28th Division carried its line forward north of Marimbois Farm, the 7th Division made no attack, and the 92d Division attacked but did not hold all its gains.

Plan Great Offensive

The line of the 1st Army November 11 extended from Fresnes-en-Woevre to Pont-Maugis. The 2d Army line ran from Port-sur-Seille to Fresnes-en-Woevre. Thus both American armies were now in position to carry out the offensive as directed by my orders November 5, which was what I had planned and advocated when Marshal Foch insisted that there should be a converging movement of all the armies west of the Meuse, with Bezieres-Sedan as the objective of the American 1st Army.

As noted in my diary of November 7, Marshal Foch had requested that six American divisions be held in readiness to join in a Franco-American offensive in the direction of Chateau-Salins, to start from the sector east of the Moselle River. The plan was agreed to, but with the understanding that our troops should be employed as a group under our own command.

This combined attack was to begin November 14, with 20 French divisions under Gen. Mangin, and a force of six American divisions under Gen. Bullard. It was my purpose that this force should be known thereafter as the 2d Army.

Gen. Bullard

I then expected to give Gen. Dickman the command of the old 2d Army, which would become the 3d, to take over the St. Mihiel front.

Of the divisions designated for the operation toward Chateau-Salins, the 3d, 4th, 29th and 36th, then in reserve, were scheduled to move eastward November 11, while the 28th and 35th were being withdrawn from line on the 2d Army front.

SEEK APPRAISER IN WABASH DEAL

A resolution asking that Ray R. Cappe, president of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board, be authorized to select an appraiser who will make a complete report on the Wabash Bridge and tunnel properties for the County Commissioners, will be introduced at a meeting of the commissioners on Tuesday.

County Commissioner Joseph G. Armstrong is expected to present the resolution asking the survey of the properties which the county is taking over to use as a vehicular artery at a price of $3,000,000.

Armstrong's proposed survey is believed to be an answer to Commissioner Charles C. McGovern who asked the board that he be authorized to obtain an expert to inspect the deal before it was closed. His request was not granted at that time.

McGovern has said the amount of property said to be included in the deal includes only a 60-foot right-of-way from Water street, whereas he had voted for the proposition under the impression that it included all the property of the Pittsburgh and West Virginia Railroad bounded by Water street, Ferry street, Redoubt alley and Fourth avenue.

Canadian Liquor Signs Ordered Dimmed

QUEBEC, March 28.—(AP.)—The wet province of Quebec, now all lit up by enterprising liquor manufacturers, is going to put on the dimmers.

The Legislature decided that illuminated signs for liquor, with the exception of those marking stores licensed to sell wines and beers, must come down by July, 1932.

Premier Taschereau, who introduced the bill, said complaints had been received from clergymen of all denominations, and that the signs gave a false impression to visitors.

sleeping in Bryant and Central Parks in order to be near their work.

But things are picking up. Morgan just loaned sixty million to Spain. Answering the waiter in French is a big social asset but you need a few more foreign languages to get credit.

And Mr. Hoover is coming back home. He was on a bookkeeping trip. Things have been disappearing so rapidly around here that Herbert thought it would be a good idea to step out and count our islands. There might be one missing.

It's sweepstakes time and we have always been a pushover for a raffle ticket.

It dates way back to the days when our old man bought monthly tickets on the Honduras lottery. Each ducat was a neatly engraved certificate entitling the holder to make plenty of demands.

The old man never got a prize. He never even got a postcard.

We seemed to have inherited the possible thrill that comes with cashing in on unearned increment. And the epidemic got a fresh start when we read about a Brooklyn barkeep winning the Grand National.

The Grand National is run in England. Then there's a sweepstakes up in Canada. That was won by a Brooklyn barkeep, too. No matter what or where the sweepstakes, first prize is always benevolently absorbed by a Brooklyn barkeep.

That man must be very rich now. He's copped every sweepstake we ever invested in.

If you don't like the Grand National as a hazardous building and loan associations, how about the sweepies for the destitute fishermen of the Gaspe Coast? Ittsa fact. When we saw the sub-title on the ticket you could have knocked us over with a 12-pound sledge hammer on the third swing.

The destitute fishermen of the Gaspe Coast. There's a sweepstake in technicolor. Investigation indicated that the Gaspe Coast is in Canada and that the Gaspians are down to their last Gaspe Coast.

It's a noble philanthropy. If you are sweep-minded we suggest that you drop an egg in that hat. The destitution is due to the fact that the shredded cod are only averaging two shreds to the schools.

We do not doubt that there are destitute fishermen. We concede there is a Gaspe Coast. But to find destitute fishermen, a Gaspe Coast and a sweepstake all under one management is a coincidence that is as uncanny as a laughing weejee board.

But we will probably buy a plaster in that sweeps. And we know that it will be won as usual by the Brooklyn barkeep.

Not that we doubt there is such a person. There must be. And if he is really a Brooklyn barkee—why—we're bound to meet him some day.

2 MEN RESCUED AS HOME BURNS

Two Patton Township residents owed their lives today to the coincidence that Fire Chief R. R. Steelman was driving in Monroeville road shortly after fire broke out in the one-story frame bungalow of Cyrus Painter late last night.

Discovering the cottage ablaze, Chief Steelman forced entrance and carried Painter, 55, a bachelor and Henry Mates, 50, from a bedroom, where they were overcome by smoke as they slept. They were revived. Patton Township firemen responded to the alarm turned in by Chief Steelman.

A second blaze destroyed the dwelling early today. Damage was estimated at $5,000.

Delight Overhears Lorry Pleading to Mary Lou

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

After having made careful inquiries as to the extent of the Lorrimer place, Delight got out of the cab, paid the talkative driver, and proceeded, avoiding the gates, to walk along the main highway which skirted one side of the estate.

The sun was warm, her high-heeled shoes not the most practical things in the world to wear on a protracted wandering and she stumbled along, uncomfortably, a little wearily, warm in her winter coat, wishing savagely that she had been able to afford the smart spring suit she had seen in a Fifth avenue window. Well, perhaps she could soon! But she had been afraid to spend what little was left over from her salary after the hotel bills and other necessities had been paid. She had to be careful, unless through this lucky chance she found she no longer need be.

She began to think of little trotteur lapin coats of tweeds and silks, of evening gowns of a sable scarf like Mary Lou's, of quantities of the very elaborate underwear and very heavy perfume which she found desirable.

Overhears Conversation

A high fence or wall ran around the Lorrimer place. It seemed to Delight that she walked miles on the other side. She was, she reflected somberly, pretty nearly always on the other side. What was it that Larry had said to her once? "Always on the outside looking in, isn't that so, old girl?" Mustn't think of Larry now. To think of Larry would complicate things dreadfully. Put Larry out of her mind. Forget that he had ever existed. What unlucky fate had caused him to exist, now that this unexpected alteration in fortunes might be in store for her? Play her cards carefully and relegate Larry to the limbo of forgotten madnesses until the time came to dispose of him altogether.

Presently, very tired, she came to a low door in the wall. It had been left open. She peered through, stooping in order to do so. She saw trees, and a path, and beyond that a perfect tangle of boxwood hedge which reminded her somehow of England, which she called and thought of as "Home."

She went down the two shallow steps, under the little broken arch and through into the pretty path. That corner of the place had, with so many others, been left to grow wild, at its own sweet will, with merely the path kept cleared and the under brush checked. The path wound and twisted through the trees, and Delight followed it idly, something young and unfarnished in her, responding unconsciously to the frail green shadows of the new leaves, to the unstartled birds, to the dappled sunlight and the bright blue sky.

She forgot, for a moment, almost everything, and was a child again, in England.

Before she knew it, she had come close to the boxwood hedge and heard voices.

One voice was Mary Lou's. It was quite clear, and Delight stopped, her heart beating fast, and listened. The path turned off just there, she stepped back and leaned against a tree. Mary Lou was laughing.

"Lorry, you're so silly," said Mary Lou.

The hedge grew very high and thick, and had been clipped into entertaining formal patterns. It had also been trained into a sort of maze, and was wide, forming a semi-circle at the point at which Delight viewed it. Apparently Mary Lou and Lorrimer were sitting there, just beyond her view.

"Well, it's a swell day to be silly in," Lorrimer remarked, and Delight leaned forward, listening eagerly. The voice was strange to her and yet touched a chord in her memory. It was deeper than she recalled it but as vibrant, as colored with overtones as the voice of the boy she had known, a voice which stammered love to her, and protestation. "You're all my world, Delight. I'll love you always."

Hears Her Name

She smiled, a twisted little grimace, remembering.

"Suppose," said Lorrimer, "we ditch this family party and go out to the Island this afternoon? I'll take you for a hop. I want you to see the plane. We won't get ours for a matter of weeks, of course, but you'll get an idea. Perhaps you'd like to choose a color scheme," he inquired, seriously, "for the fittings and what not?"

"Oh, of course, lavender and green!" laughed Mary Lou. "Why not?"

"Sounds rather boudoir," he objected. "Come on, let's go this afternoon, Delight—"

The listener shrank back against the rough bark of the great tree, hearing her name, spoken to someone else. She felt like a ghost.

"And," continued Lorrimer, "let me take you up for a ride? You like flying? You'll trust yourself with me, won't you?" he asked.

"You know I would," said Mary Lou, simply.

"But not to me," Lorrimer told her. "Isn't that right?"

She was silent. Suddenly, as the woman who listened waited, her heart beating thickly, and as the sunlight fell in golden splashes on tree and hedge and path, Lorrimer spoke again.

Pleads for Mary Lou

"I'm always breaking promises," he said, "and I know it. But I'm human, after all. Seeing you day after day, being with you constantly has only served to convince me how right that boy's love was, long ago, that love which has not altered, save to strengthen and deepen. We knew each other briefly enough, Delight, I'll admit that. We have changed, both of us, you perhaps more than I, basically. But I must have known then the sort of girl you would become, the sort of girl who would return to me, the only girl in the world. You've been so patient, Delight, with me, so understanding of all those kinks and quirks which I brought back with me out of France, out of the prison camp. You've understood the dark times and the memories and the struggle to get hold of myself. You've helped me all the way through, jacked me up when I needed it, given me the devil when I made a weak fool of myself, sympathizing, somehow, underneath; understanding. You've brought me back out of hell; you've made me, remade me into something approaching a fairly decent, self-respecting, ambitious citizen. I swear I'll be worthy, worthy of all the pains you've taken with me."

On the other side of the hedge another Delight, the real Delight, the lost Delight, listened, her face rather pale under the carefully applied make-up. So—so the girl had told him she cared, had cared? Why? Or couldn't she help it? Surely that wasn't part of her bargain.

"No, I'm not angry," Mary Lou's voice came, so low that Delight could scarcely hear it, and had to strain her excellent ears in order to catch the muted tones.

"My mother loves you dearly," said Lorrimer, and the listener caught her breath. If that were true it would be another complication! "She'd be so happy if—well, almost as happy as I would be. We—we could have so much," he went on. "Oh, I don't mean just money and freedom from anxiety and all that. I mean, we have so much to build on; we could make something so marvelous, so beautiful and enduring, from this long-ago war marriage of ours. We have, I realize now, much more upon which to build today than then. I don't admit you were right when you said that if I had found you directly after the war our romance might have gone on the rocks. But I do admit that we have more now than then. I want you for my own," he told her, "in my house, my partner, my wife, the mother of our children, for always."

DAILY TRUE STORY — Tom Laughed

"But who is she?" Oliver demanded.

"The name," Tom Andrews answered to his young brother's eager question, "is Augusta Thorpe Wellington."

"The heck it is," Oliver said. "That girl isn't cut out along the lines of an Augusta Thorpe Wellington. Look at her!"

"I can see her. She looks all right from here—in fact she is all right—a remarkable young lady."

"Of course she looks all right—she looks perfect. She doesn't look like a young lady, but a wonderful girl, and her name should be Gussie."

"Miss Wellington has brains, Oliver."

"She could dispense with them and make a hit with me, Tom. She is the nicest eyeful of feminine charm I've seen to date, and I don't intend to look any further. If you know her you can introduce me and I'll do the rest."

"What 'rest' do you propose to do, Oliver? You're only a kid yet, so watch your step."

"I'm going to marry her," Oliver said, seriously.

Tom Andrews stared at his brother and then laughed.

"Quite a small army of eligible young men have said the same thing, or, if they didn't say it, they had the same idea. Miss Augusta Thorpe Wellington is not interested in men, either in a matrimonial or even platonic way."

"What's the matter with her?"

"Not a thing—in fact I regard her as a very wonderful and nearly perfect specimen of the present-day generation of highly educated femininity."

Given Introduction

"I don't care a rap about the highly educated part, but she's a perfect specimen all right—vivacity, sparkling health, enough beauty for a screen star and one of the wholesome sort of girls that are so rare. Naturally I wouldn't be interested in a pretty dumb Dora, but I've been watching her ever since I have been here and I've got to meet her."

"All right, Oliver, me lad. Ride for a fall if you wish. We'll drive down to the pond for a try at the bass and get back here at 5. Then I will introduce you to her and watch you get sweetly given to understand, without words or offense, that you are a mere man and not worthy of her time or efforts to please."

They got back just at five. Tom pridefully handed over a string of bass to a servant and turned to introduce Oliver.

"Oliver is my baby brother, Miss Wellington," Tom said, "so be kind to him; do not spoil his childish illusions all at once."

Augusta Thorpe Wellington smiled brightly and shook hands.

"I'm a trifle late, Mr. Andrews. You may walk across the lawns with me if you wish while I ask about your childish illusions."

"Tom was wrong, they are not illusions. It is a reality, not an illusion, that you certainly do adorn the environment—here or wherever you might be. Tom says that you regard men as a sort of—er—unpleasant necessity in the scheme of life. Was a very early and severe romance blighted, or are you wise to the fact that women are just naturally superior?" Tom was keeping step with her. She had started out briskly, but began to slow up.

"Are you making fun of me?" she demanded.

"No, I am trying to open the way to make love to you."

Miss Wellington laughed, cut her laugh short, stared at him curiously and then blushed.

"There is a line for that, Mr. Andrews.

Brother Amazed

"Not for this. It isn't a line and I am not a fast worker. I've been falling in love with you every day since I came, a week ago."

Miss Augusta Thorpe Wellington sat down on a bench suddenly.

"I know people, especially men—you amaze me because you are positively sincere. Thanks for that. Too bad you cannot sweep me off my feet."

Tom Andrews was sitting on the veranda steps when Oliver got back. He was holding an unlighted cigar in his hand. He was so amazed that he forgot to light it.

"I'm a son-of-a-gun," Tom said. "You're the first male gazabo who ever got more than a formal nod out of her. What did you do—start to tell how interested you were in Federated Women's Clubs?"

"Oh, no. I merely told her that I loved her and wanted to see her tomorrow to start making love."

Tom stared at his brother and believed it. Sally, his wife, refused to believe it. Oliver asked her to invite Miss Wellington over for dinner soon and ask her if he had told the truth. He offered to lay a wager.

Oliver drove Augusta Wellington to Trenthurst and called for her and drove her home. On the way home he was calling her "Gussie."

Start on Honeymoon

"So long, Ollie, as we have a thorough understanding," she was saying—they were then at the Ollie and Gussie point—"I am sure it will be a sensible match. Marriage gives a woman a certain standing, but you must realize that I have my own interests and my career with women's clubs and that my work will be to further establish woman as the superior of man in everything."

"Darling," Oliver said, "I'd marry you if you had cross eyes and green hair and worshiped Chinese idols."

"That is dodging the issue, Ollie—not agreeing with me."

"Women," he said gravely, "are far superior to men. Some women are superior to other women and you are superior to the superior women. I am going to kiss you."

Gussie seemed to approve.

"Could any woman kiss you as pleasantly?" he asked.

They said a great deal more, and when Oliver finally came in his brother called out, "I'll bet she's got you to organize a men's auxiliary to her women's clubs."

"Wrong. I merely proposed matrimony."

"And got a polite laugh?"

"I got a kiss and an agreement. We're going to be married in October. We are going to the coast on our honeymoon because Gussie has to address some sort of a feminine convention out there."

Tom's wife called out to her husband: "Oliver is having fun with you; come on to bed."

When October came they were duly married. They went to the coast, they came back and went south for a couple of months. Then they went out to the colony and took a house near Tom's place.

Tom Andrews went over one afternoon to see Oliver on some family financial matters. He was going to walk in from the terrace to the library when he heard Gussia call out, "Ollie dear, will you come and fill my fountain pen?"

Tom Amused

Oliver was doing that when Gussie said, "I wish you would straighten out my bank account. I can't make the statement jibe with my check stubs."

He promised.

Then, at Gussie's request, he brought a footrest for her.

"And Ollie, do see what it is Lawyer Denton means about my bonds, something about a new issue. It's all Greek to me—and darling, I'm aghast to find that I didn't realize I had to declare some investment profits in my income tax—they're after me; do fix it like a dear."

Oliver again promised.

"I'm awfully busy, and hungry and Nora is out for the afternoon, could you fix up something—some cold cuts or something—for me."

He came back with a tray of attractive food, as Tom could see from where he had stood transfixed outside.

Then he strolled in and greeted them.

"What are you writing, oh most exalted and erudite sister-in-law?" Tom asked.

"A very important paper for our mid-summer convention. There's my first draft. I am correcting it now."

Tom Andrews glanced at it and he suddenly awoke the echoes with an explosive and raucuous burst of laughter.

The title of her paper was:

"Women's Superiority to Man in All Things."

End the Hypocrisy

Operation of Drug Stores and Filling Stations on Sunday Should Be Legalized—Brief Comments.

There seems scant likelihood that the Legislature will authorize, at this session, indulgence on Sunday in the innocent amusements that are outlawed by the Blue Law of 1794. But it is to be hoped that the "Blue" legislators will not permit their feeling in regard to Sunday baseball games and Sunday movies to influence them against the measures that have been introduced during the last few days to legalize Sunday operation of restaurants, drug stores, filling stations and the like.

The Blue Law has put the commonwealth in a hypocritical attitude, and the hypocrisy should be ended. The Blue Law forbids all business, all labor on Sunday except works of charity and necessity. And there is probably not an adult in the State that does not violate it with the connivance of the Commonwealth. If the law were to be fully and literally enforced the people would rise in revolution. In the interest of decency and self-respect the Commonwealth should remove the ban from such universal but unlawful practices as operating drug stores and filling stations on Sunday.

*The placing of values on public utilities com-*panies is presented in a ridiculous light by testimony given before the House investigating committee yesterday. It was stated that the Duquesne Light Company fixed the value of its properties as a basis for taxation at $49,000,000, but placed the value at $149,000,000 when the question arose what would be a fair return on its investment. If the valuation were to be fixed by a competent and impartial board of appraisers, and were to be the same for both taxation and rate-making purposes, the public would have a better chance of getting a square deal.

The Dietrich bill, calling for an investigation of company towns is a meritorious measure, and its passage might lead to the correction of some very real abuses. There are scores of communities in Pennsylvania in which all the property is owned by coal or other industrial companies, whose employes are housed in these villages. Not being incorporated, the company towns lack many of the rights and privileges enjoyed by other Pennsylvanians.

The peculiar features of the company towns were among the factors that led to the establishment of the notorious coal and iron police system. With sentiment overwhelmingly in favor of the abolition of these police, it would be no more than appropriate that inquiry be made into the conditions of local government, morals, health, education and the like, prevailing in these private communities. The Dietrich bill provides for such an inquiry by a commission to be appointed by the Governor.

Requests for new highways which would cost a total of $20,000,000 have been presented to the County Commissioners. That submitted by residents of Glenfield, Haysville, Osborne, Sewickley, Edgeworth and Leetsdale, who ask that the Ohio River boulevard be extended to the Beaver County line, is especially inviting because the right of way for the extension has already been provided, in considerable part, in the abandoned tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Legislature has been so busy with the public utilities investigation and various other matters that little attention has been given as yet to appropriation measures. When it comes to voting funds for public institutions it is to be hoped no objections will be raised to the proposed state psychiatric hospital for Pittsburgh. The desirability, declared by many to be a necessity, for the establishment of such an institution here, is recognized by welfare organizations throughout Pennsylvania.

*The Bidelspacher bill which provides for the col-*lection of the gasoline tax at the source rather than from the retail distributor has much to commend it. Fred A. Fichtel, president of the Pittsburgh Motor Club, says it would save the State a million dollars a year. It is beyond dispute that the Commonwealth loses a great deal of money because of the difficulty in collecting the tax from operators of filling stations. The State highway patrolmen spend a good deal of their time trying to collect the money.

Chairman Frank L. Duggan, of the Better Traffic Committee, has voiced the feeling of a multitude of Pittsburghers in expressing the hope that the wharves will be beautified by the city instead of being turned over to a private corporation for commercial purposes, as proposed. In European cities the river banks are turned into parks and parkways, and there is no good reason why they should not be similarly treated in Pittsburgh.

Controller Kerr's disclosure that $175,000 of bonds were mysteriously missing from his office for several days and caused him no little worry suggests that there is need for greater care in the custody of the public papers. It develops that the bonds were canceled, and they eventually "turned up;" but that does not make it any the less remarkable that the Controller was not able to obtain the information promptly.

Reductions of about 20 per cent in airplane fares for journeys between Pittsburgh and West Virginia points are announced. Air travel is steadily becoming cheaper and more reliable. For those who prize time and desire to consume no more of it on journeys than is necessary an airplane trip is the thing. That the volume of air travel is not heavier is no doubt due to the fear that many persons still have. Yet statistics indicate that the risk of accident on the regular air lines is practically negligible.

Having put a thousand miles or more between themselves and the scene of the crime, criminals, by acting circumspectly, might easily succeed, one would suppose, in escaping capture. The arrest in Oklahoma of two Broughton youths accused of killing a New York state trooper is another illustration of the fact that it is not so easy. Automobiles facilitate escape, but, by forcing the fugitives to stop at filling stations, they also facilitate capture.

*Automobiles have brought many new develop-*ments in crime. One of the most abhorrent is the robbing of drivers by persons who have begged them for a ride. A Bridgeville physician was the victim of such a robbery Thursday. A wayfarer asked for a lift, and after being invited into the car pointed a pistol at the doctor and forced him to abandon the machine. The prudent policy is not to give rides to strangers.

Poor Beggared Aristocracy

While Pitying Russians Don't Forget the Chinese.

CHINESE RELIGIOUS FIGURES, REPRESENTING POVERTY, IMMORTALITY, CONTROL OF EVIL SPIRITS, ETC.

Much pity has been poured out on the aristocrats of Russia by high-spirited American republicans, that dearly love a prince or a grand duke.

When Russia was made up of 120,000,000 workers, with an aristocracy riding on their backs, exploiting them, sending them to Siberia if they murmured, that seemed all right to many of us.

But when the hundred millions kicked out the few aristocrats and took the soil of Russia, on which they had long labored, for themselves, that brought tears from sympathetic American eyes.

If you have tears to spare, save a few for the aristocrats of ancient Peiping, great city of China.

That city now, like what was once St. Petersburg, then Petrograd, and is now Leningrad, has fallen on evil days.

As in Leningrad, so in Peiping, those that once were wealthy aristocrats are now, many of them, beggars, reduced to selling family heirlooms.

Skillfully carved in ivory, these little figures represent three things with which we are well acquainted, and two that are not explained.

The little crouching figure on the left represents a highly religious person, with a "begging bowl." You are supposed to drop a gift in the bowl, then the little man will pray for you, and that will do you good.

Next, you see a religious personage performing a function for which you should be deeply grateful. He is imprisoning evil spirits in a heavy bowl and holding down the lid with all his might and main.

Of course, he can't do this and work at the same time, so you must see that he has enough to eat and a comfortable place to sleep. Otherwise he would be obliged to let go of the lid, the spirits would fly out and one might light on you.

The figure in the middle, between his thumb and forefinger, is holding up a little pearl, which represents what deeply interests every one of us. It represents IMMORTALITY, and this good Buddhist personage, holding it up where it will be safe, is keeping it away from the wicked dragon, crawling up the front of his body to get at it.

If there were no immortality, then life and the hereafter would be a joke, and we the sport of blind nature. So we are all interested in the pearl of immortality that this Buddhist gentleman holds high and safe.

Of the other two gentlemen, one holds a tiger and the other a frog. What they are supposed to mean you must work out for yourself. But they have a valuable religious significance, no doubt. The tiger might represent ancient ferocious religion: the frog, modern, flabby religion.

Perhaps you will say: "Any aristocracy that could believe in such nonsense as this deserves to be on the streets, begging, and selling its cherished heirlooms."

But instead of fussing over the mote in our neighbor's eye, let us think about the beam in our own.

We believe in some queer things in this country, also.

Marry-Go-Round

By HELEN ROWLAND.

Mrs. Solomon Says—

Alas, my Daughter, what is sweeter—and lighter—than love in Spring?

* * *

Verily, a Spring romance is like unto a bowl of hyacinths, the fairest and tenderest thing in the world—and the frailest and most perishable.

* * *

Go to. I charge thee say not, "It is done! It is a snare and a mockery! I am through with LOVE, forever!"

* * *

For, behold, there cometh always another Spring—and therewith, ANOTHER love!

* * *

Lo, the lilac filleth the world with fragrance and refresheth the spirit. Likewise, doth a Spring romance make all things glamorous. And WHY shall a woman forswear all love and lilacs, because they cannot last forever?

Yet, I adjure thee, my Daughter, be discriminating in thy loves. For the road to pleasure is broad and crowded; but only TWO, who are single-hearted, may travel the Road to Romance.

* * *

Therefore, if cheap petters and light Lotharios entice thee, consent thou NOT. For life is too brief to admit anything within it which is neither beautiful nor useful.

* * *

And a causal lover is a deadly thing.

* * *

Say not of the philander, "He may have deceived and dallied with others, but he will not delude ME. With ME it shall be 'different'!" For lo, in his loves as in his daily habits, a man runneth always true to form.

* * *

Bachelors flee when NO woman pursueth; but married men are bold as lions. Yet, a second mortgage on a man's affections is worthless when the holder of the wedding-ring and the marriage-certificate putteth in her claim.

Every damsel in her visions seeketh the Perfect Lover; but she that is wise contenteth herself with one that is not TOO skilled. For the Perfect Lover is like unto the dynosaurus. Many volumes have been written concerning him; yet who hath ever MET one in the life?

* * *

Verily, there is a sadder thing than the damsel who mourneth the passing of a Springtime love. Yea, there is the woman who hath never HAD a lover in the Spring.

* * *

For, in December, the Cynic may scoff at love—but, in April, the heart needeth a stimulant. And a little romance is better than a Spring tonic!

Keeler, Einstein's American Colleague

By Archibald Henderson

The dominant role of astrophysics in the study of the external universe as a whole is well illustrated by the recent visit of Prof. Albert Einstein to this country. He has spent virtually his entire time in personal contact with this country's leading astrophysicists, acquiring the very latest and most important information regarding the nebulae and many other features of the universe. This knowledge he hopes to utilize in development of the third phase of his theory of relativity.

One of the most distinguished astrophysicists this country has ever produced was James Edward Keeler, born at La Salle, Ill., September 10, 1857. He had a strong mechanical bent, derived directly from his father, which stood him in good stead when he came, later in life, as an astronomer to work with large instruments of high precision. As a lad, he was an amateur astronomer, using a two-inch telescope which he had mounted himself; and somewhat later he built for himself a meridian telescope. So important became his work that he turned a professional astronomer, studying at Johns Hopkins and accompanying the naval observational eclipse party to Center City, Cal., as a junior assistant. For several years thereafter he worked as assistant to the famous S. P. Langley at Allegheny Observatory in Pittsburgh, and also studied abroad at Heidelberg and Berlin.

After working as assistant to the trustees of the Lick Observatory, then in course of construction, he became one of the astronomers and entered upon a career of great usefulness and distinction. It was fortunate for science that he was assigned to spectroscopic work, in which he showed proficiency. With his star spectroscope he made important studies of Saturn's ring, Uranus, Gamma Cassiopeiae and Beta Lyrae, and of the Orion nebulae and the planetary nebulae. He made the important discovery, hitherto unsuspected, that the velocities of the nebulae in their motion through space were of the same order of magnitude as the velocities of the stars. Among other results of his studies at this time was a series of notable drawings of the planets Saturn, Jupiter and Mars.

After serving as leader of the Lick Observatory solar eclipse expedition in 1889, he accepted the directorship of the Allegheny Observatory and professorship of astrophysics in the Western University of Pennsylvania. In 1895 he made probably the most important contribution to knowledge of his entire career. This was the clearing up of the mystery of the constitution of Saturn's rings. Many speculations regarding their nature and behavior had been made by mathematical astromoners By making use of the classic Doppler-Fizeau principle, Keeler was able to prove spectrographically that every point in the ring system was moving with the velocity possessed by a moon at that distance from the planet. The upshot of all his studies was that instead of being composed of solid matter, Saturn's rings were discovered to be merely clusters of meteorites or myriads of little moons. In the Book of Popular Science it is stated that this discovery of the insolidity of Saturn's rings in its importance has never been surpassed in the entire field of astronomy, and has been referred to as the greatest astronomical observation ever made.

On March 8, 1898, Keeler was appointed director of the Lick Observatory. His work there with the Crossley reflector, which he greatly improved, was particularly notable. Among other discoveries, he showed that there were about 120,000 nebulae scattered through the heavens, fully half of which were of spiral form. Keeler was highly honored with awards of medals, degrees and membership in famous scientific societies. Largely due to overwork, he died on August 2, 1900.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

Don't judge love by what it does to your pulse—

JUDGE IT BY WHAT IT DOES TO YOUR LIFE.

Any trivial infatuation can to your purse.

BUT UNLESS IT ALSO QUICKENS YOUR LIFE IT IS BAD MEDICINE.

You have been living along. Just living along. Suddenly a new face startles you—a new voice thrills you — the familiar scene is changed. What is this glamour, this glitter, this gleam that gilds the dingy street—the dusty air? —Why this sudden perfume of musk and heliotrope? Was that burst of scarlet always there, against the old gray wall? Who is that laughing—down that littered alley? Why are lids so heavy sweet? Why are your heels so dancing light?

IS IT LOVE?

Maybe.

Or maybe it's boredom . . . or bad gin. Stick too long in the same old rut and any new lad or lass may cause an earthquake. Jaded bodies and minds do amazing things when they run amuck. Do exactly the same things to you that alcohol or morphine and strychnine do. If you drank it from a bottle, you'd KNOW it was only a jag. But, seeing it walking around in nifty tweeds or clinging chiffons, you're sure it's Love.

But be careful! Life will hold you strictly accountable if you mix your diagnoses. And never forget for a moment that Life has first say. You can, at a pinch, do without Love. But you cannot do without Life. And Life wants RESULTS. She doesn't give a hoot for glitter and glamour and gleam. Well she knows that those are only stage effects. She wants permanent improvements. Not how does it make you FEEL, but how does it make you FUNCTION —that's the test Life makes of Love.

Does this new feeling make you stronger, braver, more eager to live? Does it give you more patience and peace and power? Does it do for you what sunshine and rain and wind and good soil do for a tree? If it does, Life will Okey your experience and you can rest assured that it's Love.

Or does it make you restless, unhappy, timid and peevish? Does it make you run away from Life —try to hide from Romance? If it does—LOOK OUT! Life will fight you! And you'll wake from your infatuation as you would from any other jag, with an awful head and a terrible taste in your mouth.

IS IT LOVE?

You can tell if you really want to. You can tell, by answering these questions. You don't want to spoil the glory with such prosaic thoughts? Don't kid yourself —you'll have to answer them. Life will MAKE you answer them. For Life brings every Love to judgment. AND UNLESS LOVE MAKES THE GRADE — IT'S OUT!

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS.

To a Child's Photograph

Tender eyes and shining hair,
Lips so smiling, debonair;
All things sweet and bright and fair
Hath the sunlight graven there.

Flower-like hands that hold a flower,
Glamour that is childhood's dower,
Faith unmarred by any shade . . .
All these has the sunlight made.

Much I marvel at the art
That to paper can impart
Budding beauty, joy and grace
Beaming from a little face.

Yet it seems but wholly right
One whose being is all light,
All things sweet and bright and fair,
Should by sun be graven there.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, March 28.—I wish people from back yonder who come to New York would quit expecting me to show them the town. Somehow they have an idea I know the place inside and out, call cops by first name, am the especial pet of night club hostesses and greet George M. Cohan with "Hello Georgie!"

There is just enough show off in me to try to live up to the picture. Among outlanders I affect the languor of boredom — the jaded boulevardier, the blase man-about-town. I also give them the impression they are in the thick of things. Any minute something portentious may happen.

That gentleman with the lapel flower and silver-headed stick may be Flash Harry, the Park avenue society crook. The slinky lady in black who steps from the robin's egg blue limousine might be the famous poisoner of the Wall street millionaire. And so on, goodness me.

If anyone telephones while back home visitors are at my house I wait until finished, slyly press the receiver and say: "All right, put Moscow on." Then I talk to Russia a minute or so. That is always good for an item in the small town weekly.

When we leave the apartment house, I say casually to the starter: "If Otto Kahn calls for me, tell him I'll be at the club later." You can see their eyes bulge. These glamorous deceptions have given the folks at the forks of the creek the idea I am quite a card.

They rather imagine I arise and play before breakfast handball with Gatti-Cassazza and one of the Philadelphia Biddles, breakfast with Theodore Dreiser, canter in the park with Noel Coward and lunch at the Colony with Katherine Cornell and Lynne Fontanne.

But one cannot forever live a lie. And how I know! Two of my boyhood friends who dropped in unexpectedly yesterday know too. In trying to prove to them what "a Boswell of modern Bagdad"—(see syndicate newspaper ads.)—I didn't even get to first base.

* * *

In the first place they wanted to see a real speakeasy—the de luxe sort. I tried to scare them out of that by explaining the revenue men were raiding them every hour. "That's just our dish—a raid!" beamed one. And he added: "Anyway with your pull they'd turn us loose in a jiffy." In the second place I was never in a de luxe speakeasy. But I heard of one in a private house in the East 50's. So we taxied there.

* * *

It was a push-the-button-and-ask-for-Emil place. When the crack in the chained door revealed a face I jittered brightly and ungrammatically: "It's just me and two friends." Someone else came to the door, peeked and there was a whispered conference. "When were you here before?" they asked To make a painful story short, there were a lot more questions, winding up by slamming the door in our faces, thereby making a swell sap of me, the no-goods.

I could feel my stock with my country friends snapping at zero. Their's was an attitude of quiet disdain that presages a behind the back whisper: "How will we get rid of this bird and go places?" Finally one said to the other: "We might try that place we visited last summer but they probably wouldn't remember us." So we taxied there. They buzzed the buzzer, the face at the peephole and wide open went the door. "Well, well, if it isn't Ed and Frank. Welcome, boys." You would have thought they were a couple of Princes of Wales. And to add to my utter humiliation, the doorman, looking at me, inquired: "Is this comic looking guy with you?"

But I think the crowning rub was on our way home. Along Fifth avenue a frock-coated gentleman bestowed a pavement kissing bow. It was my moment. "That," I beamed, "was one of the best known characters in the city." And in unison they inquired: "What does he do?" I explained that he was an internationally celebrated head waiter. A brief silence. Then from one: "Where does he wait table?"

From now on I am completely off four flushing. What does it get you? I have seen the light and am just myself no matter how it hurts and—. But I'll have to stop here. Jack Rockefeller, Mrs. Fiske, Nicholas Murray Butler and the gang just dropped in. They want me to toddle over to Jeritza's for a spot of tea.
